DEAD IN THE MORGUE.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.
BY WALDORF H. PHILLIPS.

How still she lies! Her face how white!
Closed are her eyes to earthly light;
Sweet is her sleep, how great her rest!
Why do I weep when she is blest?

Know her? Yes, and I knew her when
She was a girl, and happy then;
I loved her, too, so true and well!
It pains my heart her fate to tell.

Another came with angel look,
And we were all for him forsook;
There came a night—would she'd been dead!
'Twas then the light of Virtue fled!

Fast fell the snow, cold blew the wind;
Nowhere to go, no home to find,
The river took her to its breast,
And in its arms, there found she rest!

Well, let her rest, here let her sleep,
With only me to mourn and weep,
With only me to shed a tear
O'er this poor clay to mem'ry dear.

Well, you have heard this story old;
Its nothing new, 'tis often old,
The story of the cat and dove,
Of man's deceit and woman's love!

ON SILVER WINGS.

CHAPTER XIX.

DRAWING-ROOM TACTICS.

"Will you sing for us now?"

"With pleasure. What shall it be?" And Miss Wardlaw glanced from Lady Pechford to John Carteret.

The former answered her.

"Whatever you choose—there is not the least doubt but that we shall be satisfied."

Miss Wardlaw rose and went to the piano.

"Can I find your music for you?" asked John Carteret.

"Thank you, it is here."

John Carteret opened the portfolio, and taking out a piece of Mendelssohn's, placed it before her.

"I am not sure that I can manage it," she said. "I was practising it to sing with the proper accompaniments at the concert. It will not sound very effective without."

"Oh, do try it," exclaimed Charlotte Lovell; "we shall be delighted. I have heard so much about it; and I have been wishing so much to hear it. Do try. Imagine yourself at a rehearsal."

Miss Wardlaw still hesitated.

"I can only sing part of it. You will see the difficulties, Mr. Carteret," and she turned towards him.

John Carteret had not noticed the title of the piece; he had merely seen that it was one of Mendelssohn's; but now that he was appealed to, he looked at it more attentively; and, as he looked, a sudden light came into his face. It was the hymn, "Hear my prayer, O God," and he had often heard Diana sing it, accompanied by Signor Neri, who had arranged it for her in such a manner that the omission of the choral effects was scarcely perceptible. It was one of Di's favorites, and in the last verse she always seemed to pour forth her very soul.

"O for the wings o' a dove,
Far away would I rove,
In the wilderness build me a nest,
And remain there forever at rest."

It seemed to come like an angelic inspiration, after the agony of the prayer and the despair of the soul through ignorance, trouble and persecution—the soft liquid notes rising almost to ecstasy, as though even now she were in heaven, and had found the rest that she had first thought of in Dr. Crawford's sermon on that eventful Sunday that had changed the current of her life.

"Pray do sing it, Miss Wardlaw," he said—so earnestly that Lady Pechford's heart gave an exultant beat. John Carteret was not so insensible, so frigid, as she had been inclined to think him.

Miss Wardlaw was evidently pleased with the appeal.

"I am afraid I shall not do justice to it," she replied, as she seated herself.

She sang through the first verse and then she stopped.

"I must leave out the next verses and go on to the last," she said; and striking a few chords to connect the passages, she burst forth into the lovely concluding movement—with which, perhaps, she was better acquainted than with the other parts.

Miss Wardlaw had a very fine voice and it had been cultivated carefully. John Carteret—enthusiast as he was in music—appreciated it thoroughly; and, leaning against one of the pillars that divided the drawing-room from an ante-room hall filled with exotics, whose luscious scent produced a lethargic sensation, he listened as one in a dream.

And in the dream he conjured up the little clinging figure he had parted from in the poorly furnished "Paradiso," with the great eyes gleaming upon him, and the quivering lips fashioning their protest against his want of faith. She had been vividly in his thoughts that afternoon as he watched the wrecked vessel go to pieces, broken by the great surging waves; the foreign vessel, with no hand to guide her, no sail to bear her away into safe waters. She had failed to enter the haven, and, like a perishing soul, lay tossing and tossing until the final blow should strike her down and hide her forever from the light.

Why had he drawn the parallel? He scarcely knew why; and yet, with every fresh surge of the sea, he had heard her voice cry out to him for help. Hers had been the first note in that full chorus in its perfect melody. How many more would cry to him for guidance during the years that he might labor on earth? How should he answer them? What could he do for them? Might they not, even in his sight, go down in darkness, like the sinking vessel?

After he had left Miss Wardlaw he had wandered to the water's edge; and, in the wail of the waves beating upon the shore, had heard, in lower and lower mutterings, the cry again repeated for help!—for light!

He could not settle himself to think over his sermon—his thoughts were in too great a tumult. What had he to give to those who cried for help: had he done right in taking such grave work as he had done upon himself? And, restless and unsatisfied, he had gone home to his solitary lodging, and there he had watched the night shadow deepen and the stars look out over the ancient ruins. He had found himself wondering whether the spirits of the monks wandered a-nigh the place where they had tabernacled in the flesh, and saw the progress that had been made during the hundreds of years wherein their bodies had lain mouldering in the grave. Did it seem as long to them? How was time measured in eternity? Did, in that other sphere, the spirits of the dead ever see the changes that had come upon the earth? Or was earth's history no longer a problem, whose crooked lines could not be made straight? Did they not rather, from their vantage ground, behold that all was order, though to mortal eyes it seemed confusion; that everything converged to one great centre point that mortal blindness could not reach? Even the war-thunders that shuddered through Europe—the war-notes that rose in louder shrieks, that wailed in deeper moans than had ever been heard before—were perchance to them but the trumpet of the angel whose blast must be sounded throughout the earth 'ere the harvest can be gathered in—but one turn of the world-machinery that must work on, without a clog upon its wheels, to accomplish the purpose of a wise and inscrutable Creator.

Then he turned his thoughts selfward, and he asked himself what was he? An atom, a worm—insignificant—of no account in the myriafold wonders of creation. So preached the preachers, as John Carteret had heard them a hundred times; and hearing, his soul rebelled and rose—even as it rose now—higher and higher over the storm within him, and answered:—"Not insignificant, but of much account—as one endued with immortality—as one whose life-thread was woven into the world's history as clearly as the thread that traced the conqueror's path. Up—to thy greatest, noblest! There is no soul that is insignificant before the Lord of hosts."

John Carteret had seated himself for work, but work came not nigh him; and, as men are oft-times influenced to act by contraries, so to-night—in spite of the serious thoughts that were coursing through his brain—a sudden impulse to go to Lady Pechford's seized him.

It was yet early and he would hear the the music that Lady Pechford had promised him; and in all hours of unrest John Carteret yearned after music as one of God's best gifts to man.

Now, as he stood and listened to the melody that rolled along, chiming with the upriseu memories within him, he seemed to see the dove fly upon golden wings, and her feathers like silver, far away unto the unknown eternal, where shadowy palm trees waved their branches over the rivers of Havilah.

So absorbed was he in thought that the last notes had died away ere he aroused from his reverie.

"Just as I expected," said Lady Pechford, in a low voice; "you are enchanted."

"I am," returned John Carteret, in the same tone. "I could listen to that hymn forever."

Lady Pechford looked round at the enemy. Charles Stanfield had taken advantage of the lull in the music to resume his conversation with Dr. Lovell. She smiled.

"Charles," said Captain Stanfield, sotto voce, "you are incorrigible. You surely might leave science behind you when you enter a drawing-room. Do go and say something civil to Miss Wardlaw for the trouble she has taken to entertain us."

Thus urged, Charles Stanfield advanced towards the piano. But John Carteret was already there.

"You cannot imagine how much pleasure you have given me," he was saying.

"Have I? I am glad to hear it. One does not often find any one who really cares for Mendelssohn."

And Miss Wardlaw's face beamed contentedly.

"I shall look forward to hearing it with the orchestral accompaniments. It will be a great treat. I have only heard it with the piano."

"Then you know it?"

"Yes. I have heard it many times."

"Do your sisters sing?" asked Miss Wardlaw, with sudden interest.

"One of them did, but she is married now, and has given up music for household cares."

"Ah, most ladies do that."

"It's a pity. I hope you will never follow their example," said John Carteret.

Miss Wardlaw made no answer; but a slight flush came into her face. John Carteret, still looking over the music, did not perceive it. But Captain Stanfield, more watchful, interpreted it according to his own preconceived ideas.

"Girls' heads are always turned when there is a good-looking curate in the way," soliloquized the captain. "Now, that girl does not for a moment take into consideration that this Mr. Carteret, about whom all Linthrop is going mad, has nothing but his curacy to depend upon. And what an insensible blockhead Charles is! I believe I am more likely to fall in love—even at my age—than he is. I ought to have made a curate of him, if I wanted him to do anything satisfactory in that line."

Charles Stanfield was still on his way to the piano, when his eye was suddenly caught by some photographs of Luxembourg lying on the table. He stopped; and Lady Pechford, ever on the watch, cut off his further advance.

"These, of course, will interest you, Mr. Stanfield—the strongest place in Europe, after Gibraltar. I wonder into whose hands it will fall in the end. One will have to learn geography over again, I suppose, and old atlases will be of no value, as far as boundary lines are concerned. Ah, that is the Bock—the casemates and embrasures are wonderful. Not seen Luxembourg!" she ejaculated. "Oh, Mr. Stanfield, you must see it; you would revel in it; though I can't say much for the hotels."

And then Lady Peckford proceeded to descant at length upon the gigantic railway viaducts, the Alzette winding through the valley, the Petrusbach, and the picturesque aspect of the whole town and the fortifications.

"And I never saw stained glass of richer color than in the Church of St. Nicholas. But I suppose you don't care for stained glass—only for fortifications. You should see Luxembourg."

But though Charles Stanfield had not seen it, he knew more about it than Lady Pechford, whose casual eye had but taken in artistic effects, whilst to him each buttress, and point, and projection had its significance. She saw, as it were, the fair outer shell; he the soul of strength that was encrusted there.

"We must find a young lady for your son, who understands trigonometry and conic sections, Captain Stanfield," said Lady Pechford, after having, with skilful generalship brought up Dr. Lovell before Luxembourg, as though he had been an arriere-garde waiting for the moment of coalition with the advanced troops. "I do not know where I shall find any one in Linthrop with whom he will care to converse. The young ladies here only sing and play, and do crochet; and I suppose he will want a Mrs. Somerville or a Mrs. Marcet at the very least. Are you trying to find one for him?"

"No, I am not, Lady Pechford," replied Captain Stanfield. "I shall leave Charles to look out for himself, though I doubt if he will ever do so."

The captain spoke a little sharply, for he was at the moment thoroughly annoyed at his son's indifference to the attractions of Miss Wardlaw.

"Well," continued Lady Pechford, in a gentle, confidential tone that was peculiarly irritating to Captain Stanfield, "you have, perhaps, more to be thankful for than you are aware of. Young men who are given to flirting and thinking they are in love are constantly doing something foolish. I do not think that Mr. Stanfield would ever flirt with any one. Do you think he would? Of course, one can never tell what young men may or may not do; still, I think he might be trusted."

"I think he might," returned the captain, with considerable decision; "though I am not sure that I could say the same for Mr. Carteret"—and he glanced towards the piano, near which stood John Carteret in animated discussion with Miss Wardlaw, Mrs. Welby and the Lovells.

"That is treason, Captain Stanfield. Mr. Carteret is a relative of mine and an especial favorite, and I can quite answer for him."

Captain Stanfield shook his head.

"Don't answer for any one, Lady Pechford. It is kindness thrown away to stand as guarantee for one's friends."

"Men are so hard hearted, and so suspicious, and so jealous, I may say, of one another," answered Lady Pechford. "Now, I would trust Mr. Carteret anywhere and under any circumstances. Yes," she continued, glancing at the group that had called forth Captain Stanfield's remark, "he is very cautious—his attentions are so equally divided that no one could for a moment exclusively appropriate them. Besides, there is saiety in a multitude."

"There is safety in nothing when a girl so handsome as Miss Wardlaw is concerned," muttered the captain.

"Then you really admire her, Captain Stanfield?"

"Admire! Certainly I do. If I were a young man, and going to sea, as in the old days, I should petition to have her image carved at the prow of my ship. It would carry me over the waters with double speed."

"And you would call your vessel La Belle Mildred! How romantic! I did not think you had been so romantic, Captain Stanfield. But, then, that would be quite a different thing to flirting; it would be something deeper, something almost amounting to being very much in love indeed. Now, suppose, for the sake of argument, that Mr. Carteret should happen to be possessed of precisely the same amount of admiration; and that—he being young and just starting in life—this admiration should take the deeper form with him! You would not call it flirting then, should you? You would call it something quite right and natural."

Captain Stanfield was a little nonplussed at the case being thus turned against him.

"If Mr. Carteret is in love," he began.

"Oh, hush, Captain Stanfield," said Lady Pechford, fearful lest their conversation should be overheard. "I have never said anything of the kind. I merely suggest that, if such a thing should in due course of time occur, there would be nothing at all wrong or unnatural about it—would there?"

And she looked up with an air of serious inquiry, as though the question were one involving some consideration.

"No, there wouldn't be anything wrong in it," answered the captain, obliged to give a réluctant consent to the proposition; "and, moreover, it seems to me very likely to occur,"

"I am glad your opinion agrees with mine," said Lady Pechford. "I am sure that no one, knowing Mr. Carteret, would for a moment connect his name with anything in the least approaching wrong-doing. He is an excellent young man, and so clever. I should not be surprised if he understood all about sieges and fortifications, for he seems to be able to talk about everything. And then his sermons, are they not charming? He is so popular, Miss Wardlaw told me, that she liked listening to his sermons even better than to her father's: and that you know is great praise, for we all agree that Mr. Wardlaw is an eloquent preacher. It was quite a pleasing little tribute to Mr. Carteret, was it not?"

"Very much so, indeed," answered Captain Stanfield, sarcastically, inwardly chafing at finding himself obliged to give assent to all Lady Pechford's propositions.

"I have not told Mr. Carteret, for I was afraid of making him vain. Young men are so easily flattered, are they not? Still, there are exceptions; and I think, perhaps, Mr. Carteret and your son might be classed among them."

"Charles certainly might," said Captain Stanfield, almost indignantly. "Charles is the most indifferent, callous fellow I ever saw. Charles is a fool."

"Oh dear, no! Captain Stanfield. I cannot allow that. Consider what a splendid examination he passed at Cambridge. No young man could have done that if what you say is true. And, then, he is so intelligent. He was quite pleased with my account of Luxembourg. You must go there with him."

"Not at present, certainly."

"Ah, of course—one must wait till the war is over. One would not be safe anywhere abroad now—that is, one would not feel comfortable. Something might take place at any moment—something of a sanguinary nature, I mean. No, one must content one's self with photographs of the continental towns for the present, as I see Mr. Stanfield and Dr. Lovell are still doing. Excellent man, Dr. Lovell. I must go and speak to him. I have neglected everybody for you to-night."

And Lady Pechford glided away, leaving Captain Stanfield impressed, as she had intended him to be, with the idea that there was something more serious than a mere flirtation between John Carteret and Miss Wardlaw. Therefore the gallant captain gave himself up to moody meditations, which were in no way relieved by the occasional observations he took of the animated group at the other side of the room.

"What a noble, straightforward man your father is!" said Lady Pechford to Charles Stanfield. "There is always something so open and honest about seafaring men—such a delightful simplicity of heart. They don't see half the littleness that we meet with on shore, that tend to narrow and warp our minds. I have quite enjoyed my chat with him."

Charles Stanfield raised his dark blue eyes to Lady Pechford and a pleased smile played over his features.

"Few people can truly appreciate my father," he said.

"If Mildred Wardlaw would only praise the father a little she would soon fall in love with the son," thought Lady Pechford, startled by the fascination that shone out of the depths of the expressive eyes. "I am not sure that I shall ever be able to call him plain again—except for diplomacy's sake," she added. "You are leaving Linthorp, I hear," she said, aloud.

"Yes; my father never cares to stay long in one place, and I am idle for a time before setting to work in earnest; so we are wandering about together."

"A very charming arrangement," said Lady Pechford, much relieved. "I suppose, however, that the sea coast offers greater inducements than other places."

"Usually; but we are going into the country when we leave Linthorp—to quite an out of the world place, I believe; peaceful in primitive simplicity. We are going to visit a friend of my father's—Dr. Crawford, of Broadmead."

Lady Pechford started involuntarily. Broadmead was where John Carteret had been staying, and where, in all probability, the rustic beauty who had touched his heart was living.

"Dr. Crawford!" she exclaimed, recovering herself—"he is an old acquaintance of mine. You must tell him all about me. He will be quite interested. He was curate at Drumington when I was a bride."

And Lady Pechford sighed, as was her wont, in reverting to bygones. She would have liked to ask how long they were going to stay at Broadmead, and whether they knew any one else there; but she was far too well bred to ask any questions.

No; it must all be left to chance. Such very unlooked-for and untoward events were so constantly occurring that trying to control them was useless. Perhaps Dr. Crawford might never mention John Carteret's name—as why should he? And, as to the love affair, it was most probable that Dr. Crawford knew nothing of it; as, from the way in which Mrs. Carteret had spoken, there seemed a sort of clandestine air about it. Nevertheless, Lady Pechford's heart misgave her a little; but, like a wise general, she faced the danger in all its bearings; so that, if possible, she might counteract any contretemps that might arise.

"Then I may come to the rehearsal," were the parting words that John Carteret said to Miss Wardlaw.

"You don't deserve it, as you will not sing yourself. Nevertheless——" and she paused.

"I may come," said John Carteret, finishing the sentence.

"At four o'clock on Monday afternoon."

Lady Pechford smiled triumphantly. All was apparently working well and she would cast all fear of Broadmead away from her. The chances of danger were, after all, exceedingly small.

"Charles," said Captain Stanfield, as they sauntered along the parade to the hotel, "that Miss Wardlaw is the prettiest girl I have ever seen."

"Is she?" returned his son, carelessly.

"She is!" said the captain, energetically. Then, after a moment's silence, he suddenly burst forth, to the great astonishment of his son:—"Charles!—hem!—hum! Charles!—hum! Are you in love, sir?"

"I? No. What can have put such an idea into your head?"

"I suppose you would have told me, as there have never been any secrets between us, Charles," replied the captain, half apologetically. "I am very glad to hear it—that is to say, I am very sorry."

At which contradictory assertion Charles Stanfield wondered much but said nothing.

Of what could his father be thinking?

The Plaster Cast and What Came of It.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

"What are you laughing at, Pop?" asked Bob Duffy, one afternoon, as we sat on the bank of the Pecan Bayou, waiting for our train to come up.

"Well," said Pop Rooney, who was reading the CLIPPER, "I never look at the masked face in the heading of this paper but I think of a trick we played in Jersey many years ago on an old fellow called Nosey, and if you fellows just keep quiet a little while I'll tell you how we fixed the old man."

All hands promised to listen attentively if he would give it to us in one act, which he agreed to do.

"Now, boys," said Pop, "every word I'm going to tell you is as true as the Gospel, as you know, Muckel" (pointing to Andy Silkirk), who would swear to anything Pop would say. "When I was a'prentice boy there was an old fellow we used to call Nosey, and the best description I can give you of the old man is, that this mask face is the dead image of him. He kept a little store where he sold apples, cigars, pies, beer, and a little whiskey on the sly. Most all the 'prentice boys that lived near his place used to meet in Nosey's back room at night, for many of us had laughed it would have spoiled the cast. So we kept as quiet as we could under the circumstances. The plaster having set, the young sculps, started to remove it with the greatest care, but, to their surprise, found it stuck as fast as the old man's skin to his flesh, for they never thought to grease his eyebrows, which you can see by the picture were very heavy. His beard was about three days' old and the whiskey was on as tight as a drum head. They tried to set up, but was prevented by some plaster that had run down his hair to the floor, but the sculps. soon knocked this loose and the old man got up and commenced trying to get the cast off, but no go. He must have been in a fearful state, yet he could not mutter a word, but snort he did with a vengeance. At last one of the artists got a good hold on each side of the cast near the ears and gave it a sharp jerk, and off it came eyebrows and all. When Nosey got loose, if he didn't make things hot in that back room it's a caution to the rats. We got out in less time than it takes me tell it, old woman and all, and that was our last meeting in Nosey's back room. I have been told that the cast looked very natural, especially the eyebrows; but I never went to see it; so, whenever I see the heading of the CLIPPER, I think of old Nosey and

A MISTAKE.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

A dream—Oh, no! It could not be!
What was that rumbling sound?
And there—again! What heavy weight
Was that which struck the ground?

The cold sweat stood upon my brow,
I rushed towards the door—
I slipped and fell, within the porch,
Upon a mass of gore!

Just then I heard a fiendish laugh,
And looking up, I saw
A burly ruffian, who, no doubt,
Cared little for the law.

As quick as thought I then arose,
And cried, "Oh, man of blood!
Why take a fellow-creature's life—
What means this crimson flood?"

"It's nothin' strange," the man replied,
"I've done the same afore;
Why, I'm the butcher, and I've left
Yer dorg's meat at the door!"

HURRIED TO ETERNITY;

OR,

THE ACTRESS' ESCAPE.

A TALE OF THE THEATRE.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY W. H. F.

Estelle Lamartine, who played leading juvenile at the ——Theatre, had many admirers among the jeunesse dorée of the metropolis, who nightly occupied the seats on the front row, and heartily applauded her on her entrees and throughout the performance.

If she had been bold and pert, and had coquetted with these young swells, as many actresses are in the habit of doing, she might have retained these admirers throughout the season; but she was a quiet, modest girl, who by her acting supported an aged father and mother, and who was very ambitious to succeed in the profession of her choice.

She would have been deaf and blind if she had failed to perceive the attentions of the youthful coxcombs in the front row, and, instead of being gratified by their admiration, she was rather annoyed, especially when the beautiful boquets hurled at her contained billet doux not exactly insulting, but rather free and familiar.

"Tolerate them, my dear, tolerate them," advised the first old woman, fat, fair and forty Mrs. Thomas, "tolerate them. Boquets, applause and patronage will never kill you; and, if you manage matters properly, you can twirl them around your finger like so many bits of thread."

But Estelle dreaded that her fair fame might be compromised, and she showed as much plainly by her manner towards the enraptured youths, that their attentions were not acceptable.

This evidence that she perceived their adulation touched their vanity, and, if anything, encouraged them, each one flattering himself that he was recognized, and hoped to be in the end the favored man.

But when they failed, night after night, to obtain the slightest recognition from her, and saw that she was determined to ignore them, they wearied of the game, and one by one, or, rather twos, failed to appear in their accustomed places on the front row.

Some of them who were acquainted with the manager asked him to introduce them to the beautiful actress, threatening to withdraw their patronage from the establishment if he refused; but he did refuse, for there was a dignity and modesty in Estelle's manner which commanded respect from all, and, as she never encouraged conversation, he was no more than on speaking terms with her.

He did not, however, long regret his course in the matter, for, besides her pretty, childish face, with those large, round, blue, dreamy eyes, Estelle was gifted with a pleasant, winsome manner, and pleased miscellaneous audiences as readily as she had done the "regular patrons;" and so she became a greater favorite.

All of the swells, however, did not retire; one of them remained and continued to occupy his seat nightly.

Although of that "set," he was not exactly a swell, but a quiet, modest appearing young man, with pale, thoughtful face and hollow eye, caused as often by excessive study as dissipation; and dressed in black, as he always was, he did not look unlike a young clergyman—a wolf he was, in sheep's clothing.

He occupied one particular seat in the corner, at the end of the row, and never took his eyes off Estelle once the whole time she was on the stage.

For some nights Estelle, pre-occupied with her acting, as a true artist, whose soul is in the work, should be, did not perceive this persevering young gentleman; indeed, she was the last to become aware of his presence.

The ushers, from the frequency of their meeting, always bowed to him when he came in, and as they passed him down to his seat, whispered to one another audaciously. "He's very spoony on her, but no use;" and at length the actors and actresses spotted the young gentleman, and then it was that the object of his adoration became aware of his presence by a remark of Mrs. Thomas, who was nothing if not gossiping.

Estelle had hoped she had seen the last of the "set," as she the night before treated two of them with the silent contempt they deserved when they attempted to speak to her as she passed out by the stage-door, and the remark of Mrs. Thomas was by no means pleasing to her.

She, however, on going on the stage, glanced in his direction to see what manner of man he was, and by so doing gave him unintentionally the encouragement he had so patiently awaited—individual attention, and it is safe to say that there was no happier mortal in the theatre than Charles Grant.

Grant was on speaking terms with the manager, and was the only one of the set that had not asked an introduction to the pretty little actress.

This, however, he did that evening, at an oyster supper after the play; and, like the others, was refused, of course.

"But," urged the young man, "I am recognized me from the stage; did so this very night. I have been waiting and watching for this for weeks, and if I were not satisfied she would receive me, I would not ask an introduction of you. After this we must meet, and I know of no better way than an introduction by you. I am determined to know her, sir," the young gentleman added, resolutely.

"Well, this changes matters," the manager replied, relaxing under the influence of the wine liberally supplied him by the young gentleman; "changes the matter entirely, and if what you say is so—I don't doubt your word, sir, but it is just possible you may be mistaken in your surmises—I will introduce you; but I must first obtain the lady's consent. That will do to-morrow," he added; and true to his word, he did.

He perceived at once by Estelle's manner that the young gentleman had been completely mistaken, and, to use his own words, could have "clubbed himself" for being such a fool as to propose the subject to the young actress.

"I was not aware of his presence until last night, when Mrs. Thomas told me about him, and on going in I involuntarily glanced at him," she said. "I decline to be introduced to him," she continued, "and must ask in future never to be insulted by you with such proposals."

That night the young gentleman was in prompt attendance, and was told all by the manager.

"Never mind, now she can identify me," said Grant, cheerfully. "I will persevere. Check off the seat for me for the next twenty nights;" and night after night, no matter the weather, he was in attendance; but never once did Estelle even look his way, or, if she did, she threw her glance over him to the seats back of him, as she could not always avert her face.

One night he threw her a boquet, but she affected to believe it was intended for the leading lady, who was nearer him at the time, and she handed it to that stately lady, who accepted it with a gracious, matter of course smile.

As Estelle was changing her dress after the performance, the leading lady's maid entered her room, bearing the boquet.

"This was for you, Miss Lamartine," said the maid, handing her the boquet; "at least the note in there is addressed to you," and she pointed to an envelope snugly ensconced in the midst of the floral beauties.

Estelle blushingly thanked her, and when she had gone was about tearing the note up, as she usually did these epistles, but she thought she would read this one, and she hastily opened it and read as follows:—

SWEET ESTELLE.—A thousand thanks for that smile! It was with difficulty that I restrained myself from leaping from my seat with joy. You have no more devoted admirer than myself, and I would walk through burning plough-shares to meet you. Smile on me to-morrow night, that I may know I am not deceived, and I will appoint a meeting.

O. G.

"O, this is cruel," exclaimed Estelle, her cheeks turning red with indignation and large tears falling from her eyes. She controlled herself, however, lest she should attract the attention of those in the adjoining apartment; and consigning the epistle to the flames, she endeavored to forget all about it, knowing that if she told her parents they would be worried.

The next night he threw her a boquet when she was on the stage alone, so that she could not help accepting it.

In this was a note to the effect that the boquet the previous night was intended for her, and in it was a note, which he hoped had not fallen into other hands.

The look that she gave him when she came on the stage in the next scene, was one that would have convinced any but an infatuated youth that it was final, and that there was no hope for him—and to tell the truth, there was not, for Estelle was betrothed to a gallant young midshipman, on a brave old ship, now crossing the ocean, with the stars and stripes at her mast-head, and whom, expecting home, she did not wish to be annoyed by the attentions of any strangers.

There was a gleam of passion in the young man's eye as she cast him this look, in which there was more of pity than scorn; and when he left the theatre that night, all that there was of tenderness in his face had left it, and in the cold, white features, prematurely old from dissipation, there was cruelty, cunning, boldness and intense selfishness of the voluptuary.

He met the manager at the door, and sadly told him to sell his seat for the remaining nights; and to Estelle's great joy he appeared no more in the corner front seat; and she so much charmed by her acting that she divided the honors of the evening regularly with the leading lady; and in the forthcoming great sensational drama she was entrusted with a more important character than she had ever before attempted.

But though she did not see him in his accustomed seat, she was painfully conscious, probably through magnetic influence, that he was always near her; she fancied the man who walked on the opposite side of the street, when she went home at night, was he; and then the morning of the production, when the large supernumerary corps engaged to personate passers-by in the street was instructed in their simple, unimportant duties, not requiring a rehearsal, she fancied she recognized him, disguised as he was, in the crowd of unruly youth.

The great attraction of the drama was a sensational scene representing a railroad bridge over a river, below a water fall; the bridge, after the villains had passed over, was miraculously to break when the train which had crossed it hundreds of times came on, and there was to be a grand smash up.

With such a scene as this it is needless to say the drama was a "hit;" and cast to the strength of the company. The players, too, were successful, and particularly Estelle.

Quite fatigued by the performance, she sat by the prompter's desk when through, instead of going to her room, as usual.

When she arose to go up stairs the stage was quite deserted; and with the scene of disaster still complete, only the bridge had been restored, preparatory to removal. The centre opened down to the cellar, in order to give effect to the height. The stage was impassable. As Estelle paused in the front side to cross behind the flat, she discovered the suspicious looking youth standing there, evidently waiting for her.

Her first impulse was to scream, but she controlled herself, not wishing to attract attention; and daring to trust her light weight to the restored bridge across the chasm than encounter him by passing behind, she, quick as the thought, jumped upon the scaffolding, and before any one could warn her of the danger she had run or flitted across, closely pursued by the infatuated youth, who, ignorant and thoughtless of his danger, now that the moment for which he had so anxiously awaited had come, dashed after her.

But his weight was too great for the fragile frame, unsupported by stays, to bear, and about in the centre, over the greatest depth and the midst of the run, it gave way, and with a shriek which sounded throughout the theatre he was hurried below to eternity, his face and body being terribly mangled and disfigured. The man in the fly said the unfortunate youth exclaimed, as he mounted the bridge, in pursuit of her, "You shall not escape me this time;" but Estelle, who had by this time reached the other side, only heard that demoniac scream, which caused her to faint instantly.

The body had been removed ere she revived and found herself in the care of her affianced, who had been in port several days, but hesitated making his presence known until the production, lest he should put her out in her preparations; and when it was ascertained that the unfortunate young man, despite his modest garb and protestations, was one of the "set" who was determined to make the pretty young actress' acquaintance at all hazards, regret for his violent and sudden death was not allowed to check the joy of the re-union of the lovers.

OUR PORTRAIT GALLERY.

M'LLE MARIE MAJILTON.

The subject of our sketch was born in London, Eng., Jan. 12th, 1853. At an early age she evinced much taste and considerable talent for drawing, and produced some very clever sketches. Some of these, which she had executed when about eleven years of age, fell under the observation of Carl Werner, a distinguished German artist, who, seeing that she possessed the germ of innate talent, gave her much encouragement. Being at this period of her life in delicate health, she traveled with her two brothers over the continent of Europe. During her sojourn in the principal cities she often visited the opera houses and theatres, where she acquired an intense love for dancing and pantomime. In private she would imitate the movements of those she had seen perform, and added thereto so many peculiarities and eccentricities of her own that she attracted the attention of her brothers, who were professional dancers, and they resolved to bring her out upon the stage in conjunction with their own performances. In pursuance of this resolve she made her debut at the Imperial Theatre du Chatelet, Paris, France, in 1867, in a pantomimic, terpsichorean comicality entitled "Les Trois Diables." Her success was unqualified, and she gained from her audiences unbounded applause, and from the entire Parisian press the most flattering encomiums. At the conclusion of their engagement at this theatre Miss Marie and her brothers were secured by M. Goubert for the Grand Alcazar for a period of five months, where they achieved great popularity, and offers of engagements poured in upon them from all parts of France and Germany. The breaking out of the Franco-Prussian war, however, prevented their fulfilling any of these engagements and they returned to England. Shortly after this she made her debut in Offenbach's opera, "Orphee Aux Enfers," at the Theatre Royal des Galiers, St. Hubert, Bruxelles, Belgium, and was successful. After this, with her brothers, she accepted an engagement at Liege, Belgium, and while performing there they received a telegram from Messrs. Jarrett and Palmer, of Niblo's Garden, N. Y., offering them an engagement to appear in the "Black Crook," which they accepted and immediately left for England, and on November 24th, 1870, sailed from Liverpool for this country. They appeared at Niblo's Garden, Dec. 12th, 1870, in the "Black Crook," where they continued to perform during the entire run of that spectacle. Their performances created a great sensation in this city. Miss Majilton has a finely moulded form, a beautiful, expressive face, and is one of the most graceful pantomimists that ever appeared upon the American stage. Her dancing is excellent, her poses being the embodiment of grace, and suppleness of limb wonderful. To attempt a description of their performances would be futile. Entire novelty and the highest artistic execution are their characteristic points. So well pleased are these performers with their reception in this country that they have decided to settle here.

PRACTICAL CONFESSION.—A long time ago, says Robert Collyer, a minister who had two deacons in his congregation given to sinful ways, preached a very practical sermon, but without thinking of them. During the delivery of his discourse he took occasion to say, "Liar, stand on your feet," and to his amazement one deacon stood up, and remained standing until the exhortation was concluded. It so happened that the next paragraph commenced with these words: "Let those addicted to double dealing stand forth." The deacon who had already arisen looked over to the other deacon and whispered, "You had better get up; I did."

HIGH ARTS.—A music teacher once wrote that "the art of playing the violin requires the nicest perception and the most sense of any art in the known world." Whereupon a Western editor comments thus:—"The art of publishing a newspaper and making it pay, and at the same time making it please everybody, beats fiddlin' higher than a kite."

A MARBLE cutter near Lockport recently received from a German an order for a tombstone, with the following epitaph:—"My vife Susan is ded; if shed had life till next Friday shed'd been ded shust two weeks. As a tree fall so must she stand. All things is impossible mit God."

A QUESTION.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY GYPSY.

The quiet stars are keeping
Their watch o'er vale and hill;
In dusky shadows sleeping,
The weary world is still;
And sitting here in darkness,
Amid the flowers of June,
I'm thinking of your parting words—
"I've something to tell you soon."

I cared not for the beating
Of feet to music set,
I sought of Time, so fleeting,
One hour I'd fain forget;
Forget for one brief moment
My life long weight of woe—
You shook my hand, and smiling, said:—
"There's something you must know."

Now sitting sad and lonely,
I see your smile again,
And those last words seem only
A chord from some lost strain;
Oh! think you of the revel,
And words I know so well?
Or was it but a careless jest
That "something you would tell?"

☞ CORRESPONDENTS, advertisers, and all others writing in relation to matters connected with this or any other department of the CLIPPER, are respectfully requested to address their favors to the editor and proprietor, and thereby avoid omissions, mistakes and confusion which are likely to occur when such communications are addressed to our assistants.

NOTICE.

ADVERTISERS must hand in their favors before 6 o'clock on Monday evening, in order to have them appear in that week's issue.

To Correspondents.

LOW COMEDIAN, Philadelphia, Pa.—1. We have no record. 2. "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was first produced at the Chatham Theatre, New York, July 18th, 1853, and ran until April 19th, 1854; after that was performed three nights and Wednesday and Saturday matinees of each week until May 13th, 1854. 3. A dramatization of the Pickwick Papers was acted some months since at the New York Theatre, New York.

GYMNASTS, Mount Vernon, Iowa.—1. Trapeze performers with a circus are not expected to help raise the tent or drive wagons. People are especially engaged for that purpose. They sometimes assist in holding objects in the ring for prominent riders to vault over. 2. We cannot tell whether a circus will visit Cedar Rapids this season or not.

ACEY RACER.—1. A straight in poker counts both ways, viz.: ace deuce, tray, etc., and ace king, queen, etc. 2. A straight flush only counts as a regular flush unless specially agreed upon before commencing the game. Your other questions stand over until next week.

G. W. B.—1. He gave up all claim to it. 2. Mace did fight for it. The belt remains in the custody of Bell's Life. 3. Couldn't really say. 4. Joe Coburn was born July 30, 1835, and stands 5 feet 9 inches in his stocking feet. Mace was born in April, 1851, and stands 5 feet 8½ inches in his stocking feet.

ANDREWS, Washington, D. C.—1. We may move one point and then take it off. 2. B may also move the 6 four points and throw 10 back. 3. So long as a legitimate move can be made on the board, it must be done. In your last question the three and six could be taken with the one man.

ANDREW B., Meadville.—1. Bringing back the oar after the stroke is finished, with the blade flat to the surface of the water, or at a slight angle. 2. Heenan fought Morrissey, Sayers and King. He stands 6 feet 1½ inches in height.

G. W. D.—C having bet that he would beat A's throw of eleven, and only succeeded in tieing him, lost, of course. A tie is not a beat, nor cannot be so construed under any circumstances, therefore the result was not in accordance with the terms of the bet.

PH. D. C., Millburg, Mass.—1. Australian Kelly beat Smith and was defeated by Bill Friel and Dan Kerrigan. 2. It is impossible to say what they will weigh on the day. Mace will be about ten pounds the heavier.

CONSTANT READER, New Orleans, La.—1. A candy privilege with circus is the sole right to sell candy and other refreshments inside of the tent. 2. Your other questions we cannot answer, as they are of a private nature.

T. A. J., Pittston, Pa.—At dominoes, the two lowest having tied in count, there was no game out, consequently another hand should have been played, all taking a hand in. In the case stated, J was not out of the game.

SKATES, Albany.—You are clearly entitled to a new deal under the circumstances. Your opponent's partner had no right to show or even look at his cards until you and the beggar had decided what you would do.

C. L. B., Big Sioux River, M. T.—1. It appears, from your statement, to have been a bungling affair all through. If the judges ordered the race to be run over, the man refusing to run forfeited the stakes. 2. That depends upon the wording of the articles.

AUSTRALIA.—1. We cannot assert positively, but to the best of our belief the "quick change business" has never been given in Australia. 2. J. H. Milburn has appeared in several of the Western cities.

C. E. COLLINS.—Edwin Booth did play in the "Fool's Revenge" at the Winter Garden Theatre. It was produced there for the first time on January 14th, 1867, and was acted that and the following night.

J. H. D., Boston, Mass.—1. No; they were drawn. 2. Coburn and Price fought 160 rounds. 3. He did not issue a formal challenge to him, though he verbally offered to fight him or any one else in reply to a challenge from Joe.

W. H. D.—The steamship City of Brussels made the fastest passage from this port to Queenstown and Liverpool. The City of Paris has made the best time from Liverpool and Queenstown to New York.

BATH, New Utrecht.—Yes, they have all been played, and so many times that it would be impossible to give you the names of the ladies who have acted the leading female parts.

J. S., Canajoharie, N. Y.—1. We know nothing of his whereabouts. There are many people besides yourself that would like to ascertain. 2. We do not answer letters by mail.

OSCAR, Harlem.—You can obtain the "Pocketer's Companion" by enclosing $2 to Ed. James, 88 and 90 Centre street, this city.

JAS. D., Brooklyn.—1. She is. 2. Michael Balfe. 3. No. 4. They would not agree upon a referee. 5. The date of the Sayers and Heenan fight is April 17, 1860.

QUEER HEAD.—1. Some of the poems have been published in book form, which you can get them through any bookseller. 3. Francis Bret Harte.

R. S., Lexington, Ky.—B, having agreed to divide the pot, must abide by his proposal. It was too late to recede after the hands were shown.

B. J. O'C, Arthur.—1. Only the two horses that have each won a heat can start for the third heat. 2. There is no difference in the rule whether the race is one or two mile heats.

KEUKE.—If A has not passed, then he is entitled to the pot, for the blind, B had thrown up his hand. If, however, A had passed, then the pot remains on the table to be decided by the next deal.

A NEW BEGINNER.—It would be necessary to have the music composed for it. Address a letter to Rollin Howard, stating you wishes, in care of this office.

J. H. F., Rochester, N. Y.—1. Contortionists acquire their suppleness by arduous practice. 2. They receive from $20 to $60 per week.

E. S. S., Hudson.—Ethan Allen's fastest time with running mate is 2:15, made in a race against Dexter in July, 1867, on the Fashion Course, L. I.

O. M., Fort Plain.—There is no data by which your question can be answered. The official census returns, by which only such a question could be answered, have not yet been published.

ORANGE.—A played perfectly right. He had no occasion to put his ace of hearts on the left hower of diamonds, trumps, and could throw away any card he liked, not having a trump.

NOVICE, Washington.—The partner of the dealer can declare his intention of going alone; the latter laying down his hand and the former playing a single card.

NIAS, Binghamton, N. Y.—1. Such is not a legitimate cut, and can be objected to. 2. He cannot claim the card turned; it is a misdeal, and he loses his deal.

SCRATCH.—1. It depends very much upon the amount of flesh to be got rid of. Five or six weeks, usually. 2. Send to Ed. James, 88 and 90 Centre street, for "Physical Exercises;" price $2.

J. M. M., Lexington, K.—We were so pressed for room that we could not publish scores of any but the more important games. The manuscript was not received.

PRIZE FIGHTER.—Charley Gallagher beat Tom Allen in two rounds, occupying three minutes, at Carroll Island, near St. Louis, Feb. 23d, 1866.

W. G. R., Leavenworth.—1. B could not play it alone after his opponent had made the trump. 2. B could only score two points for the euchre. 3. B could decide to play alone.

CARR, Baltimore.—Unless the dog was one of extraordinary size you evidently gave him an overdose of the medicine, and thus unwittingly caused his death.

A CONSTANT READER, Albany, N. Y.—1. London, Eng., is the largest city in the world. 2. Junius Brutus Booth was born in England.

H. A. M., Providence, R. I.—By addressing a letter to each publication you can acquire the desired information. We cannot advertise them gratuitously.

H. C. D.—1. Apply at the headquarters of either man a few days previous to the fixture. 2. John Mulholland, 122 Mott street, will post you, doubtless.

T. E. H., Oshawa, Ont.—1. Cannot tell you his present whereabouts. Drop a line to Welsh, in our care. 2. Thank you; if anything worthy of mention transpires he send it along.

PEDESTRIAN, Pottstown.—91 miles in 90 minutes, by a special train, from Janesville to Chicago, Ill., September, 1868; 10 miles in 3 minutes, from Ham urgh to Buffalo, on the Erie road.

C. R. W., Philadelphia, Pa.—A letter addressed to the lady, care of this office, will probably reach her.

DAVID'S ISLAND, N. Y. Harbor.—At poker dice, five sixes beat five aces. Aces are the lowest denomination on the dice.

T. F. S., Boston.—We cannot give you the history of the trotting horse you enquire after.

D. E. F.—It was published in No. 7, volume 12. We have none left.

O. B. G., Montgomery, Ala.—The pieces sent are a little too highly wrought for our columns.

"SCOTT MARVEL."—Respectfully declined, the point not being very clear in this direction.

A. W., Charleston.—It is faulty in metre and not prepared with proper care.

GRATITUDE.—It is a business matter between the parties, with which we do not care to interfere.

HANK DARBY.—They were received, and one or two of them may probably be published soon.

T. O. J., Ringgold Barracks.—From $25 to $30 per week and expenses. We do not answer questions by mail.

H. C. F., Trenton, N. J.—Thank you for attention. The election notice has already appeared in the CLIPPER, however.

READING, Pa.—Holme's are now acquainted with any veterinary surgeon in Rochester or Buffalo that we could recommend.

Y. E. M.—If, according to your statement, A takes the dummy, how can D possibly take it also?

EXETER, New Orleans.—The game is drawn, both players scoring out together.

C. B., Houston, Texas.—There were large comets in 1858 and 1861, but the former was the most brilliant.

O. W. S., Charleston, S. C.—The CLIPPER is the authority in such matters.

PRIZE SCHNEIDER.—There is no regularity about the composition, although the ide a is a bad bad.

BASE BALL.—We cannot say. The matter is in dispute now. The Mutuals claim it, however.

THE RACE.

In regard to the station, Oxford had the luck, which in that respect has so often attached to them, and once again they won the choice. As in former years, Mr. Edward Searle was the starter, the boats being held by men in skiffs moored to a dummy barge. They got off very well together, Cambridge, if anything, catching the water first, and appearing to go slightly ahead in the first two or three strokes, pulled over by Mr. Bunbury, the Light Blue steerer. Directly afterwards their coxswain took them a little further towards mid-stream, and as Oxford were then rowing rather the faster stroke, the boats for a few seconds were fairly level. The state of things was but of brief duration, and Cambridge again drew away, and so rapidly, that, with a stroke of 38 to the minute, they were leading by a quarter of a length past the Duke's Head, rowing in splendid form, and working their oars together better than Oxford, who were now rowing the same stroke as the leaders. Cambridge, without quickening, continued steadily to gain in passing the Bishop's Walk, and at Craven Cottage were three-quarters of a length ahead; but from again the Light Blue bow was taken wide, and commenced the shoot for the Surrey side rather prematurely. The steering on the part of Oxford was little better; still they seemed here, in some rough water, to be picking up a bit, and at all events they were holding Cambridge, who refused from spurting, and trusted to the steady 38 which they had maintained hitherto, from getting away and greatly increasing their advantage. In the Fast Draven Point Cambridge were a length ahead, but hearing the Grass Wharf there was daylight between the boats; and notwithstanding that Oxford were rowing 39 to the minute to the 37 and 38 of the other boat, the Light Blue had a length and a quarter at the foot of it. Nothing again the Light Blue bow was taken, Oxford, with all their efforts, were unable to get any pace on their boat. At the Crab Tree the latter were keeping very bad time, and continuing to fall astern, whilst their steering was certainly not what it should be, and the unseemly business gave to their opponents a good length and a half the best of it at the Soap Works. Here Cambridge were rowing splendidly at a steady stroke of 37 to the minute to the 39 and 40 of Oxford, who latterly had been in the wash of the Cantab, and a spurt when the bow of the boat was pointed for the centre arch of Hammersmith Bridge, but this was very ineffective, and for a time the form of Oxford was about as bad as it could be, whilst Cambridge were still gradually drawing away. Taking the shoot at the bridge, Oxford were a couple of lengths astern, and though they quickened their strokes still more past Bifsen's, it was not a whit more effective, and did not frighten Goldie into the slightest semblance of a spurt. At the Lead Mills, Cambridge were two lengths and a half ahead, and now both crews were loudly cheered by the immense masses of people on both sides of the river, though we think that just at that point they were rowing their worst, and were splashing a good deal. Still Cambridge were gaining, and at the Oil Mills they led by three lengths. Now came another spurt from Oxford, who picked up half a length, only to fall back again, and to find that not this year were the Light Blue to yield at the Eyot, after forcing the pace from the Aqueduct. Another spurt a little way up the Eyot, where Oxford rowed 40 strokes per minute, was equally ineffectual; they rowed now very unsteadily, whilst the steering was not what it should have been, as the direction of the boat was changed a little every three or four strokes. Nearing the top of Chiswick Eyot, where Cambridge had regained their three lengths' lead, a couple of taps seemed on ahead of the oarsmen and gave them a considerable amount of wash, which perceptibly incommoded both, but did not effect their relative positions. Oxford keeping on 40 strokes to the minute to 38 of Cambridge. Going up the Meadows and passing the bathing-place, Mr. Gordon took a boat nearer to the course of Oxford than she had been since leaving the Soap Works, and the Dark Blue experienced a heavier wash than ever they had been exposed to as yet. This they relished so little that a hundred yards below the Bull's Head Mr. Hall brought his crew right out across the stern of the leaders, losing a little distance by the manœuvre, but placing his men in a much better position for making the effort which followed. Oxford were really going better now than for some time after the start, and, maintaining the fast stroke, picked up rapidly, until, reaching Barnes Bridge, Cambridge had certainly not more than two lengths lead—some thought rather less. But this was not all that Oxford were prepared to do, for rowing again at 41 to 42, after shooting the bridge they left Cambridge at Wilcox's with barely a length and a half the best of it. The river now became crowded with row-boats, and it was not so easy as before to discern what took place, but passing the Brewery, Oxford amidst cheers from their steamer were seen to quicken still more, whilst Cambridge, who, until they found the nose of the rival boat overlapping them, had refrained from spurting, also put on all they knew. Still they did not employ so fast a stroke as Oxford, but it was fast enough to win, and they passed the ship with a lead of rather less than a length, having rowed the distance in 23 min. 9½ sec.

HOW'S THIS FOR HIGH?

FIFTY DOLLARS FROM O'LEARY TO ROW ANYBODY.

Underneath will be found a challenge from John Shea, the well known Boston sport, issued on behalf of the Worcester boat-puller, J. J. O'Leary, which is sure to create a stir among our professional scullers. Read it:—

BOSTON, April 18th, 1871.

FRANK QUEEN.—DEAR SIR.—As the boating season is now at hand and being desirous of advancing its interests as a popular and healthy exercise, I will back J. J. O'Leary, of Worcester, to row a scull race of three or five miles against any sculler in the United States, barring Mekeel and Coulter; or he will take a minute in a race of five miles from either of the above men, for the sum of $500 a side, the race to come off at Worcester in May. Inclosed you will find $50 as a deposit. Yours truly,

JOHN SHEA, 46 Eliot street.

SAPPHO BOAT CLUB.—The Sappho Boat Club, of Williamsburgh, held their annual meeting on the 11th inst., at Gleason's, Union av nue and Grand street, and elected the following officers for the ensuing year:—Thomas Gleason, president; Will am Smith, vice president; John H. Reed, recording secre ary; Thomas J. Patterson, corresponding secretary; Joseph Gaffney, treasurer; executive committee, Denis Corrigan, William Young, Thomas Gordon and Thomas Farrell. The meeting was very harmonious, a large amount of money was subscribed and a committee appointed to make arrangements for their annual regatta, which will take place in June. The club have four new boats, and it was determined to make the coming season the most pro perous of any previous year.

COLLEGE CLUB CONVENTION.—Agreeable to a call issued sometime ago a convention of delegates from college boat clubs was held at Springfield, Mass., April 15th, and a National Rowing Association formed. The officers chosen are as follows:—C. C. Luther, of Brown University, was chosen president; E. P. Mitchell, Bowdoin College, secretary, and A. B. Mormy, of Amherst College, treasurer. A national college regatta is to be rowed in July. This movement is well-advised and will have the effect of investing collegiate competitions on water with greater interest.

A DOUBLE SCULL RACE for the championship of Newtown Creek, L. I., dis ance two miles, took place on April 10th, in Adams and W. Doyle defeating J. Greene and H. Hogan by three lengths.

CRICKET.

THE FIRST MATCH OF THE SEASON.

As usual, the Philadelphians are first in the cricket field, as will be seen by the appended score of a game played on April 10th, in Germantown, between the noted club of that village and the Wakefield club:—

YOUNG AMERICA VS. PHILADELPHIA.—The first of a series of matches between these prominent Quaker City clubs is to be played on the grounds of the former at Germantown on May 13th and 13th. Both clubs commenced the season by playing club matches on their respective grounds on April 16th.

THE GIRARD CLUB of Philadelphia, Pa., commenced the season by a match between married and single elevens on their grounds at Harrowgate on April 10th, which the bachelors won by 15 runs. Grand totals, 82 and 67.

THE MANHATTAN CLUB, of this city, intend soon commencing the campaign for 1871 with a club match on their grounds at Hoboken, N. J.

AN INTERNATIONAL FOOT-BALL MATCH, England vs. Scotland, was decided at Edinburgh, Scotland, on March 31st, twenty players on a side, according to the Rugby rules. The sons of Scotia were the victors. A return match is in contemplation, to come off in London next season.

GAMES TO BE PLAYED.

April 24—Mutual vs. Mutual Amateur Nine, on the Union Grounds.

ECKFORD VS. TONY PASTOR.—The new nine of the Eckford Club, of Brooklyn, put in an appearance in a regular match game for the first time in 1871, on Monday, April 17th, on the Union grounds, Brooklyn, on which occasion they had the "Black Stockings" nine, of the Tony Pastor Club, as their opponents. The weather was windy and chilly, and, consequently, the attendance was not very numerous. Those who were absent, however, missed seeing a well-played game, the display by the Eckford's being first class, while the "Black Stockings" did remarkable well, their only weak point being at the pitchers position. The Eckfords appeared in their new uniform of white flannel shirts and knee breeches and yellow belts and stockings, and henceforth this season they will be know, as the "Yellow Stockings," of Brooklyn. Martin's pitching was finely supported, not a base being scored by an error by their opponents, and so effective was his delivery that the Tony's did not earn a single run in the game, and only scored in their last innings by a lucky scratch. The score:—

THE WHITE STOCKINGS.—The Chicago Club having finished their games in New Orleans, left that city for Memphis on April 17th, after which they will play two games in St. Louis, viz., with the Atlantics on the 22d and the Empires on the 23d. The following is the record of their work while in New Orleans:

White Stockings	9	Lone Stars	6
White Stockings	29	Excelsior	0
White Stockings	39	Southern	10
White Stockings	28	Robt. E. Lee	4
White Stockings	28	Picked Nine	7
White Stockings	9	Lone Stars	7
Total	143	Total	35

Considering that they are without their able Captain, they have done very well to escape defeat at the hands of the experts of the Lone Star nine. Simmons has loomed up as one of their strongest players. The Mutuals are getting a rod in pickle for their White Stocking friends, and propose to show the Chicago nine how to play the game "they do not understand." Won't the fur fly, though, when these two strong nines meet? May the best club win, say we.

BALL PLAY AT THE ELYSIAN FIELDS.—The classic locality known as the Elysian Fields, Hoboken, is this season to be used exclusively by the amateur clubs which have their grounds for the season. Last season crowds of roughs used to gather there every evening and annoy the regular ball players so much that finally the Hoboken authorities interfered and put a stop to ball playing except by duly organized clubs, and permission from the city authorities, Mr. Perry acting as their agent. Ahead of the south field has been engaged for the season by the Knickerbocker, Eagle and Social Clubs, and no other clubs will be permitted to use the field. On the north field the Gothams will play, as also the Columbia College Club, leaving two days a week for another regular organization. The western field has been set apart for the Saturday games of the newspaper nines, and these are all the clubs which will play on the Elysian Fields this season.

THE OLYMPICS, of Washington, played their second public game, professional vs. amateur, on April 10th, the former winning by a score of 16 to 3. On the 15th, the regular team played a picked nine chosen from the Olympic amateurs, the Nationals and the old Maryland Club, of Baltimore. They won a good game by a score of 18 to 11.

THE BOSTON NINE played two practice games last week, on the 14th and 15th inst., respectively, Goodwin's side defeating that captained by Spalding by a score of 9 to 7 in the first game, and being beaten in the second by a count of 25 to 12.

A GRAND OPENING MATCH IN TROY.—The Athletics, of Brooklyn, will take steamer for Troy on Tuesday night, April 18th, to play the Haymakers in Troy on Wednesday afternoon at the Riverside Base Ball Park. This will be the inaugural game of the celebrated Haymakers.

THE FIRST GAME of the new series between the Confidence club, of New Rochelle, N. Y., and the David's Island club, of David's Island, N. Y. H., was played on Thursday, April 13th, on the latter's grounds, and resulted in a victory for the Confidence by a score of 24 to 9

NOTES.

The Mutuals arrived home safe and sound on April 15th, after a most enjoyable time at Savannah. Joe Start has become quite a "Saileur boy" now, and is not half as scared of the water as he was.....The White Stockings had a narrow escape in New Orleans on the 17th inst., as will be seen by the progress of innings, 0 3 0 1 0 4 0 0 1—9; Lone Stars, 1 3 0 1 0 0 2 0 0—7.....The Forest City Club, of Cleveland, will visit Chicago the first week in May for a weeks' practice.....The Athletics, of Philadelphia, open play in that city on April 20th, with the Experts. On Saturday, April 15th, the Athletics—with Bechtel pitching in the absence of McBride—played and defeated a picked nine, by a score of 24 to 17. One feature of the game was the remarkably fine fielding of Cuthbert, of the Athletics, at left field—he making no less than nine magnificent running fly catches, and also capturing a difficult foul bound after a long run.....The Experts, of Philadelphia, have secured Roth, formerly of the West Philadelphia Club, for the season. The following is the order and position of their nine for 1871; Halbach, left field; Schaffer, centre field; McLean, right field; McKenna, first base; Louf, second base; Roth, third base; Hall, short stop; Miller, catcher; Lovett, pitcher. The Experts will play at Twenty-fifth and Jefferson on Thursday of each week. They are to make an eastern tour early in May..... Pike has been elected captain of the Haymakers of Troy..... The Professional clubs which have entered for the championship are the Boston, Olympic, Haymaker and Mutual clubs, all of which have sent in their entrance fee. What are the other clubs about. Surely they are not scared already..... The Mutuals will play the Boston nine at a late date in April, in Brooklyn.....Goldsmith and Worthington, formerly of the Marylands of Baltimore, will play with the Nationals of Washington this season. Both are splendid players.

The Gramercy Club have organized and they will open play at Melrose on the old Union Club grounds on April 21st..... The Gotham Club open play for the season to-morrow at Hoboken. No clubs will be permitted to play ball this season at the Elysian Fields except regular clubs which have grounds for the season.... On the 22d inst., Galvin rejoined the Atlantic Club, and Bunting and Coffey have also been engaged to play with the Atlantics.....The Champions opened play in a practice game at Jersey City on April 15th, ...The Carrollton grounds had quite a crowd of Star players on the field on the 15th. The Stars will have their regular opening on the 22d inst.....The reason the Savannah nine scored nine runs in one inning in their second game was owing to the following circumstances: Up to the commencement of the sixth inning it was feared that the Savannah Club was to be most unceremoniously slaughtered, but in the sixth inning the club revived itself amidst the most intense excitement. The result of the sixth inning influenced the Mutuals to change the position of two of their men, and from that time to the close of the game Mills went from pitching to catching and Wolters from catching to pitching. The Mutuals now went to work with redoubled energy and checked the advance of the Savannah Club in the seventh innings ... The Jasper Club, of Manhattan College, has been re-organized.....Ex-Alderman Henry Hughes, President of the Social Club, besides paying for a handsome uniform for twelve men, buying hats, &c., has given his check for $300 for other expenses..... On the Union Ball Grounds, Brooklyn, the Eckford and Chelsea play on the 19th inst., and Mutual vs. Amateur April 24th.

COCKING.

MAIN BETWEEN NEW YORK AND N. JERSEY.

THE LATTER WINS NINE OUT OF ELEVEN BATTLES.

The third and deciding main of the rubber between New York and New Jersey, the former being represented by the veteran fancier, John Mulholland, and the latter by the recently imported, but skillful expert, Pat. Kerney, took place at the Meadow House Pit, Hoboken, N. J. on Easter Tuesday, the 11th inst. On the first occasion between the same parties New Jersey proved victorious, winning nine out of fourteen battles; but in their second tourney, New York achieved an overwhelming victory, winning twelve out of the thirteen battles fought. This Waterloo defeat did not frighten the New Jersey fancier, for he soon afterwards made the present main, the third of the rubber, the conditions of which were to show fifteen cocks each, at weights from 4 lbs. 4 oz. to 6 lbs. and fight all that weighed in for $50 a side each battle, and $200 the main. There was a good attendance, and New York, owing to the decisive victory on the previous occasion, had a strong call on the betting, the odds being $100 to $70 on Mulholland winning the main. As the result showed, the non-favorite won a hollow victory. Eleven fell in on each side.

First Battle.—The heavy weights—two six pounders—were pitted for the initiatory fight, New York showing a black red, and New Jersey a light red. It was a sharp fight while it lasted, but eventually the New Jersey fowl, owing to his superior cutting powers, won the fight by laying out his foe dead in the pit. Time, 9 min.

2. Two light weights, 4 lbs. 4 oz. each, and both dark reds. Both were rattling fighters, but a throat cut gave the New Jersey representative the second victory. Time, 6 minutes.

3. Two 4 lbs. 10 oz. fowls, a pair for New York and a black red for Jersey. Betting $30 to $18 on New York, and the layers for the first time landed the odds they had bet, for the pile won a ripping good fight in 12 minutes.

4. New York showed a black red, and Jersey one of the same color, with white hackle, each weighing 4 lbs. 5 oz. This was a quickly decided contest, for New Jersey won the fight in 5 minutes.

5. Two 4lbs. 14oz. birds, a brown red with white hackle for New York, and a pile for Jersey. Betting $20 to $16 on New Jersey, and the layers were right, for a brain blow laid the New Yorker dead in the pit. Time, 11 minutes.

6. Two 5lbs. 4oz., black reds. The odds were again on Jersey, and again won, the latter winning cleverly in 15 minutes. Five battles to Jersey, and one to New York.

7. Betting $100 to $30 on Jersey winning the main. Two 5lbs. 13oz. fowls, a brass back for Jersey, and a black red with white hackle for New York. The former won in 11 minutes.

8. New York showed a 5lbs. 4oz. black red, and Jersey a 5lbs. 8oz. brown red. A rattling fight for 8 minutes, when the New York fowl was hailed the winner.

9. Two 4lbs. 12oz. birds, both black reds. Betting $30 to $18 on Jersey, and again the layers picked out the winner. Time, 18 minutes.

10. Two 6lbs. 7oz. fowls, a black red for New York, and brown red for Jersey. The latter won. Time, 11 minutes.

11. Two 5lbs. 8oz. birds, both dark reds. Betting $30 to $13 on Jersey, who won in 8 minutes, thus scoring nine out of eleven fights.

JIM SMITH called upon us on the 17th inst., and desires us to say that he will allow the novice who lately issued a challenge ¼ mile in 25 miles, or 1 mile in 50, for $500. If the novice don't fancy it, then he'll give anybody else in the States the same chance, for a like amount, and meet at the CLIPPER office, on Saturday, the 22d inst., at 12 o'clock, M., to sign articles and stake, the race to come off three weeks after May 24th.

WM. STEVENSON won five dollars in gold by defeating J. Levy, Wagner and S. Scher, in a 440 yards race at New Orleans, on the 9th inst.

THE GOTHAM CLUB will open play, weather permitting, at Hoboken, on Tuesday, April 18th, at 3 o'clock, P. M.

CUPID'S FOIBLES, FOLLIES AND FANCIES.

OH! FOOLISH HEART.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

"If I do prove her haggard,
Though that her jesses were my dear heart strings,
I'd whistle her off, and let her down to the wind,
To prey at fortune!"—SHAKESPEARE.

I knew a lady once—she smiled;
I thought she smiled for me alone.
Then foolish heart! then wert beguiled,
Her golden smile on many shone.
Then foolish heart! then why repine?
Thy folly brings this pain of thine.

Her voice, so musical and sweet,
She whispered, thought, to me alone;
I never guess'd she could repeat
Those charming sounds when I was gone.
Then foolish heart! then why repine?
Thy folly brings this pain of thine.

Her soft and rosy lips I pressed;
I thought such bliss was mine alone;
That others, too, I never guess'd
Would kiss, and think the bliss the own.
Then foolish heart! then why repine?
Thy folly brings this pain of thine.

LOVING THE WRONG WOMAN.

ITS FATAL CONSEQUENCES.

An affray occurred at Chicago on the 7th inst., which resulted in Dr. E. Scanland being shot by his brother-in-law, Percy H. Leonard, which has, of course, caused great excitement in that city. An inquest was held the next day, and Leonard was held for trial. The following particulars we quote from the Chicago Tribune, April 9th:—

At the time the tragedy took place Mrs. Scanland was spending the night at the house of Dr. Walters, on Oakwood avenue, in the southern part of the city. Dr. Scandland having made an arrangement to remain there a few days previous to moving for a new boarding place. She did not learn the terrible news until yesterday morning. She was, of course, stunned with grief and almost beside herself, not knowing which way to go or what to do. Dr. Walters took her to the scene of the tragedy, and after remaining there a short time, she was taken away by some friends residing in the West Division, who did not allow anybody to see her until last evening, when one reporter was allowed to have a brief interview with her. She said in substance that last summer her husband made his first professional visit to Mrs. Farrar, and that upon his return he remarked that he should not wish his wife to talk to any man as Mrs. Farrar had talked to him. She (Mrs. Scanland), in surprise, asked what Mrs. Farrar had said. He narrated the conversation which he said had taken place, that she (Mrs. Farrar) had told Miss Leonard before her marriage that she should not like to become acquainted with the man who should fall in love with her (Miss Leonard); that she doctor inquired for what reason she would not like to know that man, and that Mrs. Farrar answered that she would not like to become acquainted with any man so fascinating as to win so fastidious a lady as Miss Leonard; that he then, to test her, asked her if she loved him, and she replied that she was not in the habit of giving her love unsought. Mrs. Scanland was not pleased with this exhibition of interest in her husband, but she had full confidence in his love for her, and would have given no further thought to the matter but for what followed. She accidentally, at one time, discovered the doctor and Mrs. Farrar coming from the matinee at McVicker's, walking up Michigan avenue. Soon after this she proceeded to the house of Mrs. Farrar and asked her if she had seen the doctor that afternoon, to which she replied that she had not. Whereupon Mrs. Scanland charged her with falsehood and announced that she had seen her coming from the matinee, and had seen her walking up Michigan avenue; and, moreover, that she had the moment before met the doctor coming from the house, and he had told her (Mrs. Scanland) that he had been to the matinee with Mrs Farrar. Mrs. Scanland appealed to the doctor to desist from his attentions to Mrs. Farrar, by all the considerations that a wife could address to a husband. She told him that it must be impossible for him to provide for his family if he gave up his time to waiting upon ladies; that such conduct would provoke comment among their friends, and, indeed, had already done so; that it was impossible that Mrs. Farrar could love him, because she could not love her own husband if she would attempt to win the affections of any other man away from his wife; that, although they were poor, they were still both young and had the world before them, and he might yet achieve honor and independence by a manly and upright course of life, and that she loved him too much to allow him to throw himself away. Upon this the doctor seemed very much affected and protested that he did not care for Mrs. Farrar; that he loved his own wife and child, and that he would desist from visiting her except in a professional capacity; that the family and connections of Mrs. Farrar were very influential, and that he could not afford to throw away the practice which they could bring him. This consideration induced Mrs. Scanland not to insist, as she had at first intended, upon his breaking off all connection with the Farrar family. Subsequent to subsequent Mrs. Farrar came to see her and confessed to her that she loved her husband. She (Mrs. Scanland) told her that it was impossible that a woman who did not love her own husband could love anybody else's husband. Mrs Farrar said that Dr. Scanland was so courtly, so refined and so brilliant, that she could not help loving him. Mrs. Scanland remonstrated with her most earnestly and pointed out what must be the unpleasant consequences to herself of such an unfortunate attachment; and when the doctor came home she told him what Mrs. Farrar had said, and appealed to him again in the strongest manner to remember his duties to his family, to himself and to society, and to break off this fatal flirtation. He broke forth in a rage and declared that if she was going to hold him up by the rigid, tyrannical rules of strong-minded women he would go down town and leave her to come to her senses. On the morning of the next day following Mrs. Farrar came to her house and told her that the doctor was sick at his office. She went down with Mrs. Farrar to the office and found him there. The doctor seemed to be very ill, and, after some conversation, he remarked that Mrs. Farrar had been attending him there, and that possibly he would have died had it not been for her. Whereupon Mrs. Farrar remarked that she must not believe what the doctor said, as he had been taking opium. She (Mrs. Scanland) then endeavored to reason with her, by telling him what scandal his leaving home would cause, and how it would injure his family and his practice, and labored with him to secure his return. The doctor was bitter in his remarks, and finally Mrs. Farrar interrupted them by saying:—"What are you two children quarreling about? Why don't you settle this matter?" Then Mrs. Farrar said to Mrs. Scanland:—"Let me take the doctor into another room and talk to him." Whereupon Mrs. Farrar and the doctor went into another room, closed the door, and had the most earnest conversation for some minutes, after which they returned. The doctor remarked that he would go home, and added, "You may thank an angel (pointing to Mrs. Farrar) that I have concluded to do so." Thereupon they returned to the house. Soon after this Mr. Leonard, her brother, who had watched these proceedings with a brother's interest, proposed to mortgage their property and raise $1,200 to enable the doctor to go to Kansas and open a drug store, the double purpose of furnishing him a livelihood and taking him away from Mrs. Farrar's influence. The doctor, however, declined to go. Mrs. Scanland did not abandon the idea of getting him away from the city, for she felt that in that way alone could she detach him from Mrs. Farrar she could save him and herself from the ruin which she feared was impending. A short time since Mrs. Scanland, finding herself growing feeble by reason of the constant anxiety and suffering to which she was subjected, concluded to accept an invitation to pay a visit to her relatives, near St. Joseph, Mo. While there she was informed that the intimacy between Dr. Scanland and Mrs. Farrar was continued, and more openly than ever. Some two weeks since, Dr. Scanland met Mrs. Farrar at his office about 10.30 o'clock in the morning, and they rode together out to the city limits on Madison street car, and returned, and that then the doctor went over to the Adams street bridge and waited there an hour and a half, and Mrs. Farrar came along in a buggy, took up the doctor, and for some three or four hours after that they occupied themselves in riding about the city. These and other things coming to her knowledge, she formed a sudden resolution to return to the city. She returned on Thursday last, without the fact of her coming being known either to her husband or to her brother. She proceeded to the residence of many of the south side, and sent her brother a note informing him of her presence and requesting him to come and see her. The next morning (Friday) she sent a note to the doctor, stating that a lady wished to see him at his office at 10.30 o'clock. She charged him with the intimacy, as before stated, during her absence; she told him that she was prepared to forgive him for everything, no matter what; that she loved him most tenderly; that she was ready to make any sacrifice for his sake; that all she asked was that he should refuse to see Mrs. Farrar any more. The doctor, being under the impression that the details of his continued intimacy with Mrs. Farrar had been communicated to Mrs. Scanland by her brother, went into a great passion, and declared that he would kill Mr. Leonard. About this time Mr. Leonard came into the office, and the doctor seized a large cane and advanced towards him, calling him a coward and other opprobrious names, threatening to chastise him. Mr. Leonard told the doctor that he was armed, and warned him not to touch him, and slowly backed out of the office. Mrs Scanland had her young child with her at this interview. Dr. Scanland and his family had been living with Mr. Leonard, at the house of the latter, on West Jackson street, for some time, and it became evident to all parties that this arrangement could no longer continue. After the departure of her brother a conversation ensued between her and the doctor, the conclusion of which was that they should leave the west side and seek some temporary place until they could decide upon permanent arrangements. At this juncture Dr. Walters, who has an office adjoining that of Dr. Scanland, proposed that they should go to his house on Oakwood avenue for a few days, until they could find a permanent boarding place. They accepted the invitation and went to Dr. Walters' house.

Mrs. Scanland's communication was made with frequent outbursts of weeping, and her last words to our reporter were: "Oh, the poor murdered boy! He did love me; I know he did! If I could have had a few days more I would have saved him." During the interview she frequently expressed the deepest sorrow for him, and desired that nothing should be said or published to his detriment or reproach beyond the facts of his relations with Mrs. Farrar. She also wished that an explicit denial should be made of the statement that her mother was once insane. She said that the only foundation for this statement was, that her mother, at the age of eighteen, before her marriage, had an attack of brain fever of some two or three weeks' duration. Her statement was entirely coherent and English from beginning to end.

Something more than a local interest is attached to the case from the fact that Mrs. Scanland is the well-known authoress, Agnes Leonard, under which appellation—her maiden name—she has achieved quite a reputation in the west. She has published two books, and has been a very constant contributor to journalism in Chicago and Kentucky. She was at one time, if we remember right, editor of the Chicago publication called the Woman's Advocate.

A RAID ON THE "DIVING BELLS."

From the flashy dignity and glare of keno and faro gambling houses the city police yesterday turned their attention to a more miserable grade of vice, and raided on the lower dens of prostitution in the First Ward with such signal success as to seize twenty-nine of these places, and arrest the proprietors and over one hundred of the depraved and wretched inmates. It now seems as if Saturday is adopted by the police as the best day of the week for seizing on illegal and criminal resorts. These dens of vice, which are principally in basement cellars, are thickly scattered all through Greenwich and Albany streets, and blazon out their utter degradation by their gaudy shades and painted entrances. At 97 and 99 Greenwich street is the public school of the ward, and at 117 Cedar street the primary school. The scholars of these schools, coming home during the day, were insulted, and many were in danger of contamination by the conduct of the inmates of the brothels which surround the schools. Drunken men, lured into the dens, were afterwards robbed on the public street, and female emigrants from Castle Garden, lured to the haunts of infamy, were induced to adopt a life of shame by the wiles of the keepers. Merchants doing business in the vicinity, while endeavoring to cross the ferries to New Jersey, were waylaid and annoyed, and so glaring had become the evil that Judge Hogan determined to break up the dens by having them raided on and the proprietors and inmates arrested.

Judge Hogan called on Superintendent Kelso, and, after a conference, they determined to seize upon the dens. Roundsman John J. Quinn, of Central Office, was specially detailed to gather matter for complaints, and spent night after night in the dives getting the names of the proprietors and other necessary facts. He succeeded so well that he got the names of all the proprietors of the various places and the names of the inmates, and in several cases the names and addresses of men who had been robbed while unconscious from drink. All the preparations having been completed, Inspectors Dilks, Walling and Jameson, on the morning of the 8th inst., put in an appearance at the Twenty-seventh Precinct, and notified Captain Speight to have in readiness a force of one hundred and fifty men. An hour afterwards the raid was made, and all the dens were entered almost simultaneously, and the inmates were arrested. In a very few cases the proprietors were absent, but were to be arrested on warrants granted by Judge Hogan at the application of Roundsman Quinn.

Greenwich street, the headquarters of the dens, furnished the largest number of arrests. The first den seized was that in the basement of 61 Greenwich street, kept by Henry Albert and Augusta Heigenhorger, of whom the former was arrested. The other dens seized were No. 63, kept by Mary Myers, arrested; 64, first floor, Henry Mongin, arrested; 66, Henrietta Piattman, arrested; 67, Katrina Heichler, arrested; 67½, Herman Eisencranizer and his wife Frederica, both arrested; 68, Caroline Herman, arrested; 70, first floor and basement, Annie Bidline, keeper, arrested (a woman named Josephine Johnson was arrested on Friday night for robbing $50 from J. Mack, of 51 Washington street, in this place); 84, Charles Hayner; 86 and 150, John Twicheler; 124, Enias Peccanti; 128, Edward Payson; 132, William Peterson; 133, Gertrude Wernheimer; 136, Obadiah Smith; 136½, Peter Peters; 138, first floor, Samuel Jackson; 145, basement, John Schmidt; 147, John Kruger; 152, Ernest Wagner; 156, James Miller.

In Albany street the number of dens was smaller. No. 1 was kept by Henry Metzler, arrested; No. 1½, by Charles Wilson, arrested, and No. 3, first floor, Dietrick Schumacker. In Liberty street two houses were seized and the proprietors arrested; 122 Liberty, Theodore Baerentz, and 126, kept by Louis Fallsberger. Nearly one hundred of the wretched inmates of these dens and fifteen men were also arrested. [illegible] 3d, with the [illegible] ulted all the [illegible] 00 each, and [illegible] further ex-

A SHAM MARRIAGE.

ITS FATAL RESULTS—THE GUILTY HUSBAND SHOT BY THE WOMAN'S FATHER.

A serious shooting affray occurred Friday afternoon at No. 1,421 Cass avenue, which will, without doubt, prove fatal. The particulars and circumstances, as obtained from the police authorities and important witnesses, are of more than ordinary interest.

Samuel Van Norden, the man shot, has for nearly a year occupied apartments with his family in the third story of a brick block on Cass avenue, and until very recently nothing has been observed by the neighbors which would indicate a lack of harmony or general satisfaction in the domestic relations. Van Norden has been married before, and, in speaking of his former wife, frequently mentioned the cause of her decease. By this first wife he has two children living, one of whom, a boy of thirteen years, has been a member of the present family. In some way, however, the suspicions of the last wife were aroused, and a few days ago, when she was informed by the little boy that his father had written to New York, she gave orders to the letter carrier to have all letters left at the house instead of the shop. By this means she intercepted a letter on Thursday, written by Van Norden's New York wife to their joint husband. Concealing her information, she visited an attorney, whose name we could not learn, and placed the matter in his hands. On Thursday evening her husband called for her at the house of a friend, and they walked home quietly together, as if nothing had happened. As soon, however, as they entered their rooms, he turned upon her and demanded the letter, of which, it seems, he had obtained some knowledge she refused to comply with his request or tell him anything, whereupon he knocked her down, with her babe in her arms, and otherwise maltreated her. Then, taking his razor, he proceeded to cut into shreds valuable dresses and clothing which she had purchased with money that belonged to her before her marriage. The neighbors were aroused by her screams, and a large crowd collected in the vicinity. An officer appearing shortly after, the man was arrested and taken to the Third District station on the charge of disturbing the peace. The case was brought up in court, and continued for several days. Van Norden, upon gaining his liberty, went back to the house and found the rooms unoccupied, his wife having gone to a neighbor's for fear of further injury. Van Norden at once began to put the carpets and put the furniture in a condition to be taken away, and while thus engaged alone in the rooms the father of the misused wife was seen to enter the house. From the injured man's statement it seems that the father, whose name is John Irvine, and who lives in East St. Louis, entered the room where Van Norden was at work, and said:—"Here you are, then," or something similar, and without another word raised his pistol and fired two shots, both of which took effect. Van Norden cried:—"Don't, for God's sake," and rushed to the door to escape. He first ran out into the passage and then turned and started down stairs. This brought him face to face with the old man, who had started after him. Irvine then fired a third shot, the ball grazing Van Norden. The wounded man then ran down both flights of stairs out into the street, and nearly a block up Cass avenue, finally taking refuge in a blacksmith shop near Sixteenth street.

Irvine followed him down stairs out on the street, and then down an alley, and ran across some vacant lots to the Mulanphy Home, thence making his way rapidly to the river, and crossing at the Venice ferry. Van Norden immediately sat down on a stretcher, after entering the shop, and was soon taken with fainting fits and vomiting of blood. Dr. Eaton was called, and upon a hasty examination it was found that one ball had penetrated the breast and apparently lodged in the lungs. The other ball had entered the abdomen a little to the right of the centre and passing through the body, coming out, probably, just below the kidneys. A carriage was at once secured and the sufferer taken to the hospital. Upon examination there the surgeons gave it as their opinion that the man cannot possibly recover, and that his death might be expected at any moment.

Not long after the time when Mrs. Van Norden, as she supposed herself to be, visited the attorney with the intercepted letter, a search was instituted among the records of East St. Louis to see whether her marriage was recorded. No trace of such a record could be found, and it was discovered that the ceremony had been performed by some vagabond divorce seeking authority to that effect. As soon as the news of this double disgrace came to the father of the wronged woman he became very much excited, and started for St. Louis. While on his way to the house he called on some friends, talked about his troubles, and said he was going up to see about it. Strong efforts were made to dissuade him from his purpose, which had the apparent effect of calming him down, but he soon slipped out unnoticed and made his way to the scene of the tragedy. Yesterday afternoon officers were despatched to East St. Louis in search of him, when it was found that he lived just east of the first toll-gate on the Collinsville road. He had been there and told his wife the particulars of the occurrence, and made up a bundle preparatory to going away until he learned how the wounds resulted, but affirmed that he would ultimately give himself up to the authorities. He is a man of about six feet in height, with dark hair and thin brown chin whiskers. He was still at large up to a late hour last night. The sham ceremony was performed six years ago, and all this time the parties have been living together amicably, although the husband's character has not been above reproach. Van Norden was a boss carpenter and sash-and-door builder, and had some property in the upper part of the city. The family lived in good style, and were generally looked up to as exceptionally free from domestic differences.—St. Louis Times. April 8th.

A WEDDING TRAGEDY.

THE BRIDEGROOM SHOT.

Dark and bloody was the deed! A feeling of horror thrilled through the hearts of the many witnesses who stood by and saw a young and happy bridegroom shot down, and without any apparent cause, by the hand of the sneaking assassin. A merry and joyous company had assembled one evening in the parlor of the St. Nicholas Hotel to do honor to the union of two loving hearts—the marriage of Mr. J. C. Foster, late of Bowling Green, Kentucky, to Miss Rose Bird, of this city. Father Donnelly had just performed the marriage ceremony. The bride was in the parlor, attended by a bevy of beauties and merry young maidens. The proud bridegroom had but just passed out into the saloon to receive the polite and congratulations of his friends, when there entered an uninvited guest, a Mr. Thomas Smith, of Independence, who at once accosted Foster. Very few words passed between them. A bystander overheard the following conversation, the meaning whereof is still shrouded in mystery. Foster was standing at the corner of the bar when Smith said, "You do not mean it." "I will do it. Then prepare yourself." In the same time he produced a navy revolver and fired into Foster. Turning around, without a word of explanation, the assassin walked out of the saloon, putting up his pistol as he walked coolly across the street past the court house. Turning between the market house and the court house, he mounted his horse and fled out into the darkness of the night unmolested, unnursued. The bridegroom staggered backward as he received the shot, and fell upon a billiard bench. Medical attendance was soon upon the scene, and the wounded man carried up stairs. His cries were continuous, his only exclamations being:—"Tom Smith, why did you murder me?" "Oh, why have you shot me down upon this my wedding?" "I, who was your best friend and loved you! Oh, Tom, why have you murdered me?" An examination of the wound by Drs. Milliran, Taylor, and other surgeons, who se names we were unable to learn, showed that the bullet had passed through the right hand, and had entered the abdomen near the groin and glanced obliquely downwards, lodging about three inches from where it had entered. The opinion of the surgeons was that the wound was dangerous, but not necessarily fatal. The grief of the bride is beyond description. The fair and elegantly attired bride, stricken down in her grief and horror, was surrounded by her bridesmaids and relatives. Here and there were fair girls lying prostrate and insensible from fright. Sobs and whispers were the only sounds to be heard. All was sadness and grief where joy and glee had reigned supreme not twenty minutes before. Tom Smith is now under indictment for robbing Stone & Thornton's bank in the upper part of the city. The family lived in good style, and were generally looked up to as exceptionally free from domestic differences.—St. Louis Times. April 8th.

A SERIOUS FAMILY FEUD.

A HUSBAND AND WIFE DISPUTE THEIR RIGHTS TO THEIR CHILDREN.

At a term of the Kings County Circuit Court, some two months since, Edward St. Quigg, a real estate agent, residing in South Brooklyn, brought an action for divorce against his wife, Eliza, on the ground of adultery. As alleged, the defendant had been on criminally familiar terms with her nephew, a young man about 22 years of age. The trial excited considerable interest at the time on account of the social standing of the principal parties and the peculiarities of the case involved, and resulted in a verdict in favor of the defendant. The children remained with the mother at her residence, No. 370 State street, while the father lived in Second place.

The next phase in the affair occurred on Wednesday night, after nine o'clock, about which time the attention of Officers Kellett and Conner, of the Third district police, was attracted by the cries of children in the vicinity of Court and Degraw streets. On proceeding to the place they found Amelia Kellogg, aged 14; Esther Kellogg, aged 13, and Charles Kellogg, aged 9 years, making vigorous resistance to the efforts of their father and another man to force them into a carriage close by. The children appealed to the officers for aid, stating that their father wanted to take them from their mother, and that after the latter's home was completed all the children to the station house. Mr. Kellogg and his counsel, Wm. Coit, demanded the custody of the children as a right. The latter appealed to Sergeant Williams to be taken to their mother, and to keep their father from taking them away. The sergeant listened to the appeals of the children, and sending for the mother, placed them in her charge, and directed several of the officers to escort them to the home of their selection.

Miss Esther Kellogg, one of the children, made the following statement in regard to the affair:—On Monday or Tuesday last my father sent me word that he wanted to see me and my little sister and Charlie, my brother, and that on Wednesday evening I was to come with them to the place store of Mr. Henneford, in Court street, near Degraw street. We left to go there soon after 7 o'clock. When we got there father had not yet come and we waited till about half-past 8 o'clock, when he came and bought us each a pair of shoes and a pair of slippers. Then we all went out together, and when we reached the street he took me up in his arms and put me in a carriage that was standing near, and said he wanted me to go with him to New York. I refused to go, but told them that my father drove of the carriage and would not let me out. Just at this time my uncle, Mr. Kershaw, brought my brother Charlie, who was struggling in his arms, and put him in the carriage. My sister was not touched; father said he did not want her. At this time I managed to open the door on the other side of the carriage and jump out, and while father ran round to catch me I hallood murder and screamed with all my might. Several gentlemen ran to my help and they asked me what the matter was, and I told them that my father was trying to steal me and take me away from my mother. Then father said to me that the people I was his child and that they had better mind their business. Just then two policemen came and took me to the station-house. My uncle was all the time holding Charlie in the carriage. If it had not been for the policemen we would have been taken away, though we all said we didn't want to go. My uncle was helping father and my oldest brother was with them. We went home with mother.

The brother is about 19 years old and resides with the father in Second place.—N. Y. Star, April 14th.

A ROMANTIC GERMAN-FRANCO ALLIANCE.—Judge Dowling, at the Tombs Police Court, on the 12th inst., joined in the bonds of holy wedlock a young and very handsome couple. The bride, Elise Eugenie Hammerman, was a native of Paris, and the groom, Frederick Fries, a manly and military looking Prussian American. Nine years ago Frederick left the fatherland and betook him to Paris to seek his fortune. While there he formed the acquaintance of Miss Hammerman. The acquaintance soon ripened into ardent friendship, and in less than a year the youthful couple had pledged their troth. But Fries was poor, and in Paris he could see no prospect of bettering his circumstances so as to allow his marriage within a reasonable time. He determined to try what he could do in the New World, and accordingly started for America, first giving to his affianced bride a solemn pledge that, if he lived, he would return in 1870 to fulfil his promise. When the allotted time had expired, Fries, who had been successful in business, started on to fulfil his pledge, and despite all the terrors of war, succeeded in reaching the French capital. Getting into Paris, hard as that was, proved much easier than getting out, and so the faithful lover had to endure all the miseries of the siege. At its close anarchy took possession of the city, and Fries was just as badly off as ever. He couldn't get a clergyman to marry him, and it was only after surmounting almost innumerable difficulties that he at last succeeded in getting away with his affianced from the doomed city. A few days since they arrived in New York, and when sufficiently recovered from the sea voyage went before Judge Dowling and were made one, and sealed the contract with an affectionate kiss.

A DIVORCE SUIT RESUMED.—The case of Joseph P. Merrill against his wife, Florence A. Merrill, for divorce, came before Judge Spencer, of the N. Y. Superior Court, Special Term, on the 6th inst., on a motion on behalf of defendant to open a default. It was represented on behalf of plaintiff that they were married on the 27th of December last, and on the 3d of January following his wife left him and went to live in a house of ill fame. On behalf of defendant it was claimed that her counsel appeared for her when the suit was first commenced, and presenting a paper purporting to be signed by her, directing him to withdraw from the defense of the case, did so withdraw. The cause had been referred, but no decree had been rendered, and defendant now asked to have the default opened, and that she have leave to come in and defend, she alleging that she had no notice of the former proceedings, now had a good defense to plead, did not authorize a withdrawal of the defense, and that subsequent cohabitation had taken place. The Court opened the default, and gave defendant twenty days in which to answer.

A WEDDING SENSATION.—The last sensation, says the Louisville Journal of the 4th inst., is over a matrimonial mishap which occurred not long since. The case is that of a lady who, laboring under the mistaken idea that a husband incarcerated in the state prison at Frankfort amounted to a divorce a vinculo matrimonii, without any intervention of a decree from a court having jurisdiction to grant divorces, gave herself in wedlock to a gay old widower of seventy-three summers. The consequence was that only a few days of matrimonial bliss were allowed them, when the stern, inexorable law stepped in and declared them twain, notwithstanding the man of God had pronounced them bone of one bone and flesh of one flesh. They twained accordingly, and executive clemency has already been brought into requisition to relieve the lady from any prosecution for bigamy. The couple are now quietly resting on their oars, waiting for the next term of the Chancery Court to come, when a divorce will be obtained from the "old love," who is still in prison, and another wedding gone through with as to the "new." The bridesroom has already given substantial evidence of his affection for the lady. On the day of their first wedding he deeded her two hundred acres of land and made her a present of three thousand dollars in money. Afterwards he was so well pleased with his choice that he increased the land gift to five hundred acres and the money to five thousand dollars. Should the lady, to further test the affection of her lover, make a demand of a few more thousands on the day of their second wedding, it would add another interesting feature to the case.

A FIENDISH OUTRAGE.—Again are we called upon to record the facts of an outrage nearly as fiendish as the South Broad street case, and quite as horrible as the recent affair at Martinsville. At No. 933 Cantrell street, in the lower section of the First Ward, is the residence of a Mr. Feeby. About one o'clock Sunday morning three young men entered the house and proceeded directly to the room occupied by Mr. Feeby and his wife. The former was seized by two of the men, while a third attempted to commit an outrage on Mrs. Feeby. The cries of the assaulted parties brought to their assistance Mr. Jameson, who lives directly opposite. He was immediately set upon and driven into the street, and although he fired four shots from a revolver at the party, he failed to hit either of them. On reaching the street he was knocked down and badly beaten, and his revolver and a $10 greenback stolen from him. At this moment Officers Miller, Hayden and Feeney, of the Seventeenth District, arrived on the spot and the assailants fled. They were pursued, and one of them, who gave the name of McCullough, was arrested. Mr. Jameson's father-in-law, an old man, was also badly hurt by being struck on the head with a brick. Subsequently Sergeant Duffy succeeded in arresting the other two young men, who gave the names of Thomas Murphy and Thomas Keys. McCullough, it is said, was discharged from prison about four or five days ago. The accused had a hearing on Sunday morning before Alderman Bonsall, who committed the whole party to Moyamensing.—Philadelphia Press, April 11th.

A PEARL NECKLACE, costing 300,000 francs, presented to the Princess Pauline Murat by the ex-Empress Eugenie, was recently sold for 90,000 francs, the princess having been forced so to do by an exhausted exchequer, and her desertion by her husband, the Duke de Mouchy.

A GLANCE AT EUROPE.

NAPLES—NATIONAL MUSEUM—CATHEDRAL OF ST. GENNARO—MASINELLO'S TOMB—CATACOMBS—GROTTO OF POSILIPPO—TOMB OF VIRGIL.

"Behold how brightly breaks the morning!" was the first exclamation on the advent of the second day of our sojourn in Naples. After partaking of a sumptuous breakfast we started for the National Museum, one of the most interesting collections on the continent of Europe and one of the principal attractions for strangers, as here is to be seen the masters, bronzes, mural paintings and mosaics found in Pompeii and Herculaneum, besides a large collection of Egyptian antiquities. On the first floor are statues, both in marble and bronze, cabinets of mediæval objects, ancient glass and Pompeian earthenware and mosaics. The second floor contains cabinets of gold and silver ornaments, engraved gems and medals found in Pompeii, eight halls of oil paintings, eight cabinets of Etruscan vases, bronzes, ornaments, coins and manuscripts, a cabinet containing a small collection of books on art and some drawings by the old masters, and two cabinets of papyri from Herculaneum. The National Library is a magnificent apartment, occupying the central portion of the building, on the floor of which is a marble slab on which the twelve signs of the Zodiac are engraved. At certain seasons of the year the rays of the sun penetrate a small hole in the roof and mark the sign on the slab. There is also a remarkable echo to this apartment. On striking two books together the reverberation is repeated over twenty times. In the portico to the left are the marble statues of two Dacian kings, a dead Amazon, mounted warrior, several statues of the Balbus family, found in the Theatre of Herculaneum, statue of the "Farnese Gladiator," several statues of athletes and a bust of Cleopatra, and in the second portico are equestrian statues from the Basilica of Herculaneum, "Ganymede and the Eagle," "The Indian Bacchus," "Venus and Cupid," "Jupiter," "Apollo," "Hercules," etc. In the third portico are colossal busts of the emperors Julius Cæsar, Titus, Marcus Aurelius, Hadrian, Carracalla, Augustus, Antonius Pius, etc., also some of the latest discoveries at Pompeii, a dancing fawn, an Amazon on horseback, a mounted warrior, a bust of Sappho, and a large statue of Agrippina. We now come to to the hall of Atlas, with a fine kneeling figure of that personage carrying a globe representing the heavens, also a number of busts bearing the famous names of Anacreon, Herodotus, Demosthenes, &c., then the hall of Flora, so called from having a statue of that goddess, considered one of the masterpieces of Greek art. This statue was found in the ruins of ancient Rome. Here is the great mosaic of the battle of Issus, found at Pompeii. In the hall of Adonis are the statues of "Venus" and "Adonis," "Cupid with a Dolphin," &c. The hall of the muses contains some beautiful sculptures and bas reliefs in white marble. In the hall of Apollo there are a colossal statue of "Apollo Playing the Lyre, some statues of different colored marble, beautiful specimens of columns and vases of rare material and workmanship. In the hall of Jupiter we find the celebrated "Venus," found in Nero's golden house, a mutilated statue of "Psyche," the "Farnese Bacchus," and a colossal statue of "Jupiter," seated. We now proceed to the collection of bronzes, which far exceeds, in number and value, any other existing in the world. Next we enter what is called the secret museum, containing a lot of paintings, statues, carvings, &c., from Pompeii, which shows that the ancient Pompeians were not a very moral class of people. No lady is allowed to enter this apartment under any pretence. We now proceed to the room which contains the smaller curiosities found at Pompeii and Herculaneum, where we see gold finger rings and breast pins of the very pattern worn at the present day, loaves of bread from the bakers' oven at Pompeii, with the baker's name and the date stamped on them, surgeons' implements, medals, coins, papyri, mantle ornaments, candelabras, earthenware, &c. The paintings and mosaics found in Pompeii and Herculaneum are a large collection and occupy a series of five rooms. The paintings are from the walls of the houses, and represent beasts, birds, fishes and mythological stories, dancing figures, dwarfs and other caricatures, some of them very gracefully executed. In many instances the coloring is wonderfully preserved, considering how many ages have elapsed since they were painted. The most interesting picture is "Medea Meditating the Murder of Her Children." In another apartment is a lot of inscriptions from the shop fronts of Pompeii, a few in bronze and the rest in marble; also a colossal statue of Hercules and a group called the "Farnese Bull," cut from a single block of marble, by Appolonius of Rhodes, 200 years B. C. The group consists of the bull, two men and two women. The Egyptian Antiquities is a very interesting collection from the land of the Pharaohs, come next in order. The picture gallery occupies the uppermost floor, and contains upwards of a thousand valuable paintings, many of them the work of the old masters. There are three hundred churches in Naples. The Cathedral of St. Gennaro stands in a narrow street, on the site of two temples dedicated to Apollo and Neptune. It was destroyed by an earthquake in 1450 and rebuilt by Alphonse II, of Aragon. The interior is lofty and very imposing, and within are the tombs of Charles I, of Anjou, and Charles Martel, King of Hungary. On the right side of the nave is a large chapel, with handsome brass gates, called the treasury of St. Januarius. Here takes place, three times a year, the miracle of the Liquefaction of St. Januarius' blood, contained in a phial. This ceremony and the display of the treasures of the chapel attract a large crowd. The way this church was visited was St. Maria del Carmine, near the railway station. It was in front of this church that Masaniello was assassinated, as he came out after taking the communion, and his remains lie entombed beneath it. Our next visit was to the Catacombs, which are very extensive, and are excavated in the hills. On the north side of the city the largest galleries have a height of 15 or 16 feet. The side walls contain niches for the reception of the body. In some of the galleries these are nine and ten tier high. At the entrance is a small chapel containing an altar, where the guide lights his torches and you proceed to follow him through this silent receptacle of the dead. After passing through various passages and crossing others, we come to a large apartment, about twenty feet square and fifteen feet high, filled with niches from the floor to the ceiling, and in the centre of the room was a stone pillar about four feet high, the top all hacked as if with the blows of an axe. The guide informed us that this was a place of execution in the Pagan times, where they used to lead the criminal up to this pillar and force him to lay his head on it, when he was instantly decapitated with a sword or axe. When Garibaldi took Naples, a few years ago, he had about four thousand cart-loads of decayed mortality removed from them to give the public a chance to visit them. These catacombs extend a great distance underground and occupy a large space, and are said to have existed long before Christianity, and the guide informed us that there was another gallery beneath our feet just as large as this one, and still another beneath that. Our next excursion was to the grotto of Posilippo and the tomb of Virgil, the poet. The grotto of Posilippo is a tunnel cut through the rock to shorten the road from Naples to Posilippo, made by the Romans, but has since been enlarged and is now lighted with gas. Its length is about half a mile, breadth from 20 to 25 feet, the height varying from 30 to 70 feet. At the entrance to the tunnel, cut into the rock is a small cell, inhabited by a monk of the Order of Mendicants. This order live entirely by beggary, going about bare-headed and bare-footed and wear only a coarse, brown serge garment, tied around the waist with a rope. On the left of the entrance to the grotto is a flight of wooden steps leading through a vineyard to the top of the hill. As you pass along you see the rich grapes hanging in clusters, and you have only to reach out your hand and gather as many as you want; also fig trees loaded with their delicious fruit. Arriving at the top of the hill, a gate is unlocked and we are admitted into a garden, crossing which we enter an old Roman tomb in a tolerable state of preservation, where a marble slab which marks the spot where the great poet Virgil lies. It was his own wish that he should be buried on the hill of Posilippo, and his sepulchre has been visited by crowds of visitors through several centuries. A laurel tree planted by Petrarch once flourished by the side of this venerable tomb and covered its roof,

BASE BALL.

THE MUTUALS AT SAVANNAH.

On Sunday, April 9th, the Mutuals, of New York, arrived at Savannah, Ga., on the steamer General Barnes, at 2.30 P. M., and were met by a delegation from the Savannah Club, who extended a warm reception and conducted them to McConnell's European House, where quarters had been provided for them during their stay in the city. They declined invitations to visit places of interest about the city, remaining quietly at their quarters the balance of the day. On the following day they played their first game with the Savannahs, fully three thousand persons assembling to witness the contest. From the Savannah News of the 11th we clip the following account of the play:—

THE GAME.

First Inning.—Kimball to the bat, but quickly retired on three strikes. May followed and escaped to first base on a passed ball, after three vain efforts to hit Wolters' pitching. Harris struck a high one, which Alden dropped. Smith came home and Start went to second. Ferguson batted for first, taking Start to third. Mills batted to an out and Start came in. Eggler closed the innings by striking out. Two runs.

2. Harris struck a foul to catcher, Potts out at first base and Neidlinger followed suit on a fly to first. No runs.....Wolters hit a heavy liner to left field and went to second. Patterson struck light, but reached first by a close shave. Wolters going to third, and home on a passed ball. Pearce took a rest on a high one to catcher and Smith followed by a foul bound to the same attentive individual. Start struck a long fly to Beard, but Neddy was unequal to the emergency and Patterson came in. Hatfield batted for first, but jogged on to third on passed balls, bringing in Start. Ferguson struck a foul, which was captured by Murnan, and the innings closed with three runs for the Mutuals.

3. The score now stood five to nothing, and the Savannahs went to the bat melancholy but determined. Alden made an effort, but was stopped at first and retired for refreshments, and Murnan immediately followed to keep him company. Beard astounded the community by a rattling hit, which enabled him to reach second but his triumph was short, for McNulty immediately struck out, and Neddy went out to seek consolation, making another "sphere" for the Savannahs, but they were recompensed, for Mills and Eggler went out in quick succession by the agility of May. Alden and Potts, while Wolters was disposed of by Murnan. First blank for the Mutuals.

4. The Savannahs were now quite encouraged by the results of the previous innings, and went more hopefully to the willow; but Kimball and May were relieved from the fatigues of the innings by popping up two nice little ones for Mills, who feelingly took them in out of the wind. Harris batted well for first, and Potts followed with a high one to centre. Pearce skirmished for it, but it leaked through, and Potts took first and Harris second. Neidlinger accommodated the second baseman with a good catch, and the side retired, as usual. Patterson elevated the ball, but Beard got under it and captured it in fine style. Pearce went out at first by Kimball and Potts, and Smith closed the innings with a foul fly to catcher. No runs.

5. The excitement was now running high, cheer after cheer for the Savannahs was given by the crowd, and the boys went to the bat greatly encouraged, but retired, more in sorrow than in anger, in "one, two, three" order.... Start made a singer and wheeled into first, Hatfield following with a daisy cutter to left field, which took him to first, and assisted Start to second. Ferguson struck a muffer to Harris, and all three came in on badly handled balls, the Savannahs seeming to become suddenly demented. Mills struck to short stop, got to third on more wild throwing, and got finally home by Eggler's strike for first base. Wolters struck to catcher, and a fine opportunity for a double play occurred, which was spoilt by Kimball dropping the ball. Patterson out by Harris and Potts. Pierce struck for two bases, and Wolters came in on a wild throw. Smith hit a high one to centre, and Pierce came in. Start took first after gaining a life by a muff of a fouly catcher, Smith coming in. Hatfield hit a heavy centre and went to first. Ferguson closed the innings by batting one to Kimball, which was handsomely stopped and thrown to first, putting out Hatfield, making the first double play in the game, and was a fine exhibition of skill by Kimball and Potts. Seven runs for Mutuals.

6. The game now stood 12 to nothing in favor of the Mutuals, who, notwithstanding the tremendous efforts of the Savannahs, were evidently having it all their own way, and the boys went in again to the sacrifice. McNulty made a hard run for first, but found the ball ahead of him. Kimball struck to centre and got to first by Hatfield dropping it. May hit heavily to centre, sending Kimball to third and taking the first himself. Harris struck to centre, which was taken in and the side went out by May being forced off first. No runs.....Hatfield went to first on a good hit, but was forced out at second by Ferguson's hit to Harris. Ferguson was played in on passed balls. Mills struck a high one to right field, but Kimball put an end to him. Eggler hit a little one, but got to third on a wild throw to first. Patterson struck to short stop, but reached the second, sending Wolters to third on more wild throwing. Patterson sent a grounder, which took him to first and Wolters home. Smith to second and Pierce to third. Start hit for first, bringing Pierce home and allowing Smith to reach second. Hatfield struck a heavy one, bringing Smith and Start home. Ferguson popped a high one to Kimball, and closed the innings with six runs for the Mutuals.

7. Harris batted well for first, but was forced off by Potts, who was in turn forced out by Neidlinger. Alden batted the side out at first, the "noughts" following with touching regularity.....Mills hit a terrific one to centre, but Neidlinger was there and Mills put on his coat. Eggler followed with a grounder to left, putting him first and reaching third on wild throwing. Wolters went to first and Eggler home. Patterson hit heavy for two bases, after a reprieve from Beard, who dropped a foul fly. Wolters went to third and home by Pearce's hit for first. Start struck a high one to Eggler, which was well taken, Patterson coming in immediately after. Hatfield sent one skimming to left, bringing Smith home and Pearce to third. Ferguson closed the innings, for six runs, by hitting one to Neidlinger, which was fielded in good style, putting Ferguson out at first base.

8. Murnan struck a foul fly to Mills, and Beard followed suit, like a nice little man who delights in following the example of his illustrious predecessor. McNulty got to first on a liner to centre, but Kimball hit one to second, putting McNulty out by forcing him off, and the side closed as usual. A change was now made in the Savannah fielders, Harris taking the left, Beard the centre and Neidlinger relieving Murnan in the catcher's position....Mills struck a high one to centre, which was nourished by Beard. Eggler knocked one to May, who couldn't throw quick enough for Eggler's lively pedestrianism, and Eggler was safe. Wolters reached first and Eggler second by loose playing on the part of the Savannah in-fielders. Patterson got to first on a hit to centre, bringing Eggler home, Wolters going to third. Pearce went out at first through the assistance of Kimball and Potts, Wolters coming home. Smith went to first by a hit to left, which Murnan couldn't reach, and Patterson came home. Start hit a little ope to second, forcing Smith out. Side out on three runs.

9. The Savannahs went to the bat with an evident determination to make a run, if in the limits of human possibility, and were not without some hope, although their score presented a universal blank. Kimball led off with a grounder, which got him to first. May struck a foul into the crowd, which was finally stopped by a big nose, (one run which didn't count.) May tried another foul, which Mills developed into an out. And Harris followed suit through the politeness of Hatfield. Potts hit for first by a very close play, giving Kimball second. The umpire's decision on this point is regarded as an exhibition of fine judgment and a thorough knowledge of the game. Neidlinger came to the bat and hit a magnificent grounder to the right field, sending Kimball home amidst the tremendous cheering of the vast crowd; and when Potts followed immediately after, on a wild throw, the excitement and enthusiasm was boundless, the long pent up feeling of the multitude being vented in long continued cheers for the gallant Kimball and Potts. Alden went confidently to the bat, and hit well to centre, bringing Neidlinger in, who was enthusiastically cheered. Alden reached third on passed balls, but was shut there by Murnan, who, after receiving the first base on called balls, was caught napping, and the side went to the field. Three runs.....Start struck a heavy grounder to right field and went to second. Hatfield went to first on grounder, Start going to third and home on a passed ball, Hatfield making third. Ferguson hit high to right, taking the first and sending Hatfield and Start home. Mills hit for first, forcing Ferguson out at second. Eggler followed, striking first and forcing Mills out at second. Eggler reached third on passed balls, but was left there by Wolters hitting a long fly to centre, which was gracefully caught by Beard, thus closing the game, with a score of 29 to 3 in favor of the Mutuals. We append the score:—

It was the original intention to play the second and last game on the 12th inst., but the Mutes acceded to a request made by the Savannahs and consented to have it come off on the day previous. The weather was not propitious and the prospect of rain served to deter many from attending; still there was a very respectable-sized gathering. Ferguson was unable to take part in the game, Patterson filling his position, and C. S. Hunt going to right field. At 3:30 P. M. the game was called, Augustus Friend acting as umpire, as in the previous contest. The Mutuals, winning the toss, took the bat. The first innings developed four runs for the Green Stockings before Eggler went out on a foul bound catch by Murnan. The Savannahs then went in to do or die, but they failed in making anything, a goose egg denoting the result of their labors with the bat. Neidlinger occupied the position of short stop, Harris going to left field, McNulty to third and May to right. In the first five innings the Savannahs made but one run, against the Mutuals' thirteen. During these innings Charley Mills and Wolters exchanged positions, Mills pitching a slow and yet difficult ball. When the Savannahs went in on the last half of the sixth innings they were seventeen runs behind. Not discouraged, they went to work manfully, and by good batting and some loose playing on the Mutual side, counted up ten runs, making in all eleven runs in six innings, against eighteen for their visitors. The next, or seventh innings, proved a blank for both sides, leaving the score unchanged, Wolters pitching and Mills behind the bat. The eighth and last innings bore five runs for the Mutuals, the Savannahs retaliating with three runs on Wolters' deceivers. A heavy thunder storm coming up at this point, the game was called, leaving the Mutuals victorious by a score of 23 to 13. The playing on either side was not as effective as in the previous game, though the result was far more creditable to the Savannahs. The score:—

ECKFORD OPENING.—The Eckford Club opened play in the field, in a match game, April 12th, 1871, on which occasion they played against a field side of thirteen with the following nines:—A. Allison, 1st b.; Martin, p.; Jas. Snyder, s. s.; Nelson, 3d b.; Swandell, 2d b.; Hicks, c.; Geddney, f.; W. Allison, r. f.; Josh Snyder, c. f. Umpire—George Snyder, Eckford Club.

Holdsworth, their short stop, was not on hand till late. The Field side did not earn a run in the game.

THE DE WITT CLUB (colored), of Camden, N. J., defeated the Stantons, of Philadelphia, on April 10th; score, 51 to 36. The uniform of the De Witts is blue shirts and knee breeches, white stockings and caps. They want to play any colored club in the country, or any amateur or junior club, composed of white men, in the Quaker city.

THE OLYMPIC, JR., of Washington, D. C., elected the following officers recently:—President, J. Boggs; captain, C. Hodgson; treasurer, E. C. Accardi; secretary, C. M. Sanderson; directors, J. Castell, W. Collins and E. J. Accardi.

THE ROCKFORD TEAM (Forest Citys) have accepted an invitation to play against a picked nine composed of players residing in the principal towns of Kansas, and the game will probably take place late this month or early in May, at Kansas City.

THE ADELPHI CLUB, of this city, played a practice game, Nine vs. Field, on April 10th, the former counting 25 to 6. This junior club is in want of a pitcher and short stop. Inquire at No. 10 John street, or 37 Avenue B.

THE STARS, of New London, Conn., opened play on April 7th, the regular nine defeating the field by a score of 24 to 6.

ATHLETICS vs. PICKED NINE.

The Athletics, of Philadelphia, opened play for the season on the afternoon of Easter Monday, the 10th inst., defeating the best nine that could be selected in Philadelphia, comprising Luff, Roth, Miller, Lovett and McKenna, the five best players of the leading amateur club of that city, the Experts; Bechtel, the tenth man of the Athletics, and Pratt, of the last year's nine, of that club, with Flowers and Weaver, formerly of the Keystones. The afternoon was one of the finest of the season, and a very large assemblage, numbering nearly two thousand persons, were present. Both nines exhibited excellent play at times, and the fine fielding displayed by the Athletics evinced that they were far superior as a nine to that of last year. The most prominent features of the game were the splendid out-fielding of Culbert and Sensenderfer, of the Athletics, and Bechtel and Weaver, of the picked nine; the excellent base playing of Pratt, Luff and McKenna, of the picked nine, and Fisler, of the Athletics. McBride pitched with his usual speed and precision, and excelled in batting for the Athletics. Roth made several fine hits for the picked nine, and Reach and Meyerle made brilliant three base hits. The crowd interfered materially with the play. Lew Simmons impartially umpired the game. The following is a complete score of this finely played game; the various columns of figures indicating outs, runs, times bases on clean hits, total bases on clean hits, bases on errors, left on bases, number put out on bases, fly catches made, foul bound catches made, total put out, number of times assisting, and times at the bat:—

WHITE STOCKINGS vs. R. E. LEE.

The champions of Louisiana met the famed Chicago nine on Sunday, the 9th inst., and for five innings gave the gentlemen from Illinois all they could attend to, the pitching of Fitzsimmons being wonderfully effective and troubling the Stockings considerably. McAtee going out twice on strikes, and Hodes (or "Waxey," as he has been nicknamed by the gamins of the Crescent City) once. At the close of the fifth innings the game stood 5 to 3 in favor of the Stockings, the play up to that point having been about the best ever seen in New Orleans; but after that the Lees let down so rapidly that in the seventh, eighth and ninth innings their opponents scored twenty runs, of which they only earned three. The Lees have lately been strengthening their nine. In "Fitz," late of the Montgomerys, they have an unusually effective pitcher, while Burtis promises to become by long odds the best catcher playing in the southern states, he alone putting out eight of the Stockings by sharp tip catches and foul bounds. Of the Stockings, King won much applause by a fine running catch, on which he made a double play, Tracey and Foley also capturing several fine flies. Hodes played behind the bat in fine style, not a single base being earned on a ball passing him during the game. The batting on both sides was decidedly weak, and will bear much improvement. The main cause of the Lee's bad defeat was their lack of physical training, for had they been enabled to bear for nine innings the strain put upon them in the first six, they would, it is thought, have played a brilliant game. The following is the score:—

BOSTON vs. LOWELL.

Below is the score of a match played on the Union grounds, Boston, on April 8th, between the Boston nine and the Lowells. Harry Wright writes, saying:—"I have put George back in his old position, Barnes 2d b, and they both play better. Barnes made as pretty a catch as could be made on the ball field, way out in right field, running hard. Dave caught good, not a passed ball, and was hit in the ribs by a foul tip. Five minutes more gave them the one run in the 9th innings. We did some very safe batting, making 43 first base hits." The score:—

THE AMENDED RULES.

A COMMUNICATION FROM THE CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE OF RULES.

We have received from Mr. Chadwick, the late secretary of the committee of rules of the National Association, the following statement relative to the causes of the delay in the issue of the amended rules, and pointing out the errors made in the Chicago edition of the new rules:—

NEW YORK April 15th, 1871.

TO THE BASE BALL FRATERNITY.—GENTLEMEN.—Ever since the organization of the National Association it has been a rule of the association to allow the chairman of the committee of rules, after reading his report to the convention, to retain the copy thereof, and to prepare it in its amended form for publication by the secretary, or printing committee of the association. There has been no exception to this rule up to the period of the convention held in New York, November 30th, 1870, on which occasion I, as chairman of said committee, was forced to give up the manuscript copy of my report to the secretary, which contained my private marks and notes of the amendments introduced at the convention, together with other amendments which I had intended to offer, but did not report, and which were not acted upon by the convention. The plea of the secretary in demanding my report was that he could not make out his report of the minutes or of the amendments without it, he not having copied the amendments made, as it was his duty to have done. If being impossible for him to define my notes, and as he afforded me no opportunity to consult with him so as to have the report properly prepared, although I accompanied him, with Mr. Thomas Foley, to the hotel after the convention had adjourned, in order to copy the amendments for him, it necessarily followed that errors would be committed by the secretary in his endeavors to interpret my report; and, in glancing over the printed copy of the new rules that have been prepared for distribution to the clubs, I found several serious and important errors, one of which is the insertion of a section which was neither reported nor adopted; and another, that of omitting a change in the wording of a section so as to prevent it from conflicting with one of the amended rules. Under these circumstances, I do not hesitate to pronounce this edition of the amended rules as incorrect and also unofficial. I have explained why they are incorrect, and I now state why they are unofficial. In 1865 a mistake of the printing committee in interpreting the report of Dr. Jones, who was then chairman of the committee of rules, led to a change being made in one of the sections after the rules had been printed. It was then stated that no publication of the amended rules would be made official unless the same had been revised and endorsed by the chairman of the committee of rules acting at the time such amendments were adopted. This has been the rule ever since. It is eminently proper that it should be so, as only the chairman who presents the report embodying the amendments of the rules presented to each convention is competent to revise and prepare them for publication, the secretary being but the official medium of transferring the rules from the chairman of the committee of rules to the printing committee. Deeming this explanation due to the fraternity, if only to relieve myself from any responsibility in the matter of delaying the publication of the new rules, I beg to remain, yours most respectfully, HENRY CHADWICK, late Chairman of the Committee of Rules of the National Association of Base Ball Players.

BILLIARDS.

RUDOLPHE vs. DION.

Last week we gave the result, as received by telegraph, of the second game of the series of three between A. P. Rudolphe and Joseph Dion, played at San Francisco, Cal., on the 1st inst., and we now present full details. The first game was played on March 15th, being the English three-ball game, which was won by Dion by 44 in 1,000 points. The second was the American game, four-ball caroms, 1,500 points up, push and crotch barred, played on a Phelan & Collender 11x5½ table, each carom to count three, and the stake was $1,000 a side. Platt's Hall was the scene of the contest and there was a large audience present, including a number of ladies. Dion, having won the lead, chose the white ball and opened play at 8.40, attempting to lay off at the upper left-hand pocket, but dropping in. Rudolphe took both balls out of the pockets, and, taking his cue, commenced to measure the diameter of the balls. Dion objected to his handling the balls, as the game had commenced, and took up what he thought was his own ball, but, discovering the mistake (having lifted the spot-ball), he replaced it and attempted to take his own, but Rudolphe would not allow him, and a scuffle seemed imminent. Dion called for a decision, when the referee threw down the book and left the hall, saying he had had enough of it and would not act any longer. Rudolphe then played into the right hand pocket. As they had no referee the game was again at a stand-still. Twenty-five minutes were lost in selecting another referee, which caused great confusion. Rudolphe rushed around, talking excitedly to every one, while Dion sat quietly in a chair and allowed his representatives to settle it. Mr. Hughes was proposed and took his seat, but a person in the audience objected to his serving. Several others were proposed and objected to. Frank Hutton, the referee at the former match, was asked to serve, but said he had had enough of the game; also, had money bet on this game. Wm. Shear was agreed upon, Mr. Gates was appointed marker and the game was resumed at 9.15 P. M., by Dion playing into the right pocket; Rudolphe laid off near the right-hand pocket, when his opponent followed by playing into the opposite pocket. Rudolphe played into the string for safety. Dion attempted a good bank and missed. Rudolphe played and on the second shot pocketed the white; he made 15. The first call was made at the conclusion of the eighth innings, when Dion made 48, pocketed 144 to Rudolphe's 96. Rudolphe then made 12, and missed an easy shot, leaving the balls together, when Dion made 15, missing an easy draw, leaving the balls in almost the same position, when Rudolphe made 60 points. The second call was announced at the end of the ninth innings, showing Dion 159, Rudolphe 141. On the thirteenth innings Dion made 51, when he got the balls in good position, but unfortunately froze. He played a push shot and pocketed himself. On the fourteenth innings Rudolphe, by careful play, made 90, and was followed by Dion, who added 24 to his score. On the next innings Rudolphe passed Dion with a run of 45, the game standing—Rudolphe 391, Dion 285; but Dion picked up the next time he got the balls with a run of 121, placing him 7 ahead. The playing was ordinary until the twenty-fourth inning, when Rudolphe made a run of 56, when in the sixth he call the game stood—Rudolphe, 462; Dion, 331. On the seventh call the game showed Rudolphe 537, Dion 345. On the twenty-ninth innings Dion got the balls together, and by masterly nursing, taking them from the top to the bottom of the table, made a beautiful run of 195. Rudolphe played, and by making a scratch on the second shot, ran 64. On the fortieth innings he also made a large run, scoring 154. Dion made 87 on the forty-fourth innings and the forty-fourth innings Rudolphe made the largest run of the evening, namely—228. This lead he maintained, and turned the 1,300 point with a run of 87, placing him 343 ahead

Introductory Overture.

MONDAY, April 17th, '71.

THE EVENT of the past week was the pageant in honor of the close of the war between Prussia and France, and if ever our German population "laid themselves out" to do a big thing, Easter Monday was the time. They gave us a free show, with moving figures, novel effects and various dramatic situations of a high order of merit; it was a parade worthy of the amusement-loving Teutonic element, including in its operations a pay raid on the lager beer saloons and restaurants of the most devastating character, much to the delight of the "men who keep the places." The week has been kept up as a sort of holiday, a continuation of the great event on a smaller scale.....

And while reading the various mottoes emblazoned on banners carried in the line of procession, we wondered how it was that "no nigger in the fence" was seen, how it was that our Germanic brethren made all their vast arrangements, and set the great pageant before the people of New York without getting entangled in the irresistible nigger question? or Schleswig-Holstein discussion. And having our mind on our colored friends and brothers, we thought also of the colored sisters, and came to the conclusion that a most appropriate motto for the double-headed girl would be—"United we stand.".....A great deal has been said and sung of late concerning one Mary and her little lamb, eminent writers of the day, both here and in Europe, contributing to the literature of the period in able essays and beautiful poetic imaginings touching the lamentable and pathetic history of this young girl and her pet. Of the early life of Mary very little is known—nor have any of our most learned historians been able to inform us where or in what manner the little lamb referred to came into the possession of the youthful female; it is to be regretted that the pedigree of the two cannot be given intact, so that the connecting links to make the record complete might be supplied. Neither among the archives of the United States, nor in the great libraries of the world, have we been able to discover anything bearing upon this important subject. The earliest record we have merely says:

"Mary had a little lamb."

You will perceive it states most explicitly that she had a lamb, which would lead to the inference that the two had in some way, and at some remote period, become estranged and parted. Great importance seems to be attached to the fact that the wool gathered from the little lamb was of unsullied purity, for all writers agree on this point, the able author of a beautiful and soul-inspiring poem on this plaintive theme making the declaration—which has never been controverted, either by proof or intendo—that

"Its fleece was white as snow."

There is much difference of opinion among those well versed in ancient lore, whether the word fleece is proper, many savans insisting that fleas is the word intended, and which, they maintain, was so expressed in the original. We do not agree with these latter gentlemen, in so far as we have never yet seen a white flea, since the foundation upon which those savans have reared their structure crumbles away at once. On the other hand, we have evidence that fleece is of a dirty white nature, and proof is not wanting to show that instances are on record where portions of the fleece were really ipso facto as white as snow. Miss Lydia Thompson, who has certainly given the subject more study than any other controversialist, declares in favor of fleas; sub contrariem Miss Miss Weber, who is pretty good authority on primeval literature, leans to the side of fleas, basing her argument on the assertion that fleas as white as snow may have existed in the ante-diluvian period in a crude state, but have since been wiped out by some totally unlooked for national calamity. We merely refer to these authorities to show how great minds most widely differ on questions in which human progress is concerned. That there was deep affection existing between the young lady and the lamb is likewise true, the latter, probably, evincing a steadfast love seldom observed in the best regulated families; for, on this single point, the expressive and eloquent language of the poet says:—

"And every place that Mary went
This lamb was sure to go."

"Our Jim," who has given the matter some attention, says it is possible that the lamb was compelled to go, which would not speak very well for the affection of either party. We admit that there is something in James' argument—it is plausible, if nothing more. Now, it is certainly noteworthy that the lines we have quoted contain all the information that has been gathered by ancient writers in re "Mary and her Little Lamb." Hence, in our efforts to discover anything additional, we have experienced difficulties almost insurmountable; yet our researches have not been without results of a very extraordinary character. "Our Jim," who has been uniting in his explorations of the shelves of second hand book stores, says that he has discovered in an old English edition of some unintelligible work a verse in manuscript which credits the aforesaid Mary with the positive possession of other property than that referred to by the poet, videlicet, the little lamb. James insists that the resurrection of the missing link proves that Mary was not of no mean order, yet we cannot help feeling that the lines, after a careful and unprejudiced perusal, remind us very much of Jim's own style of composition; yet mere surmise is not legal evidence, and this, therefore, would not be received in a court of justice. Hence we accept his affirmation as truth, and therefore close this exhaustive article with the long lost verse which bears upon a subject dear to every cultivated mind:

MARY'S POSSESSIONS.

Mary had a little corn
Upon her prairie farm
And every place that Mary went,
This corn was sure to go.

It is possible that biblical authorities may yet unravel much of that mystery which has heretofore surrounded Mary and her possessions and puzzled lexicographers of the first water.....Our minstrel friends seem to be getting out of the old "nigger" groove, and moving in more legitimate channels, and some of them, we are told, make rapid progress; frinstans, there's one of them, who, but a few weeks ago figured in humble ways, on the black boards, now plays with great "Pomp" on the white. [Explanation.—"Pomp" is the name of a play he is now performing in.—ED. CLIP.].....The pageant of "Richard Third" has at last been produced at Niblo's Garden, and it is to be hoped that the management will find King Dick a pas cent indeed.....They do say that "Horizon" at the Olympic is a risin' in public estimation. From its success and the scene of its denouement, "Horizon" should be called a grand "westward ho!' risin' play. (It is somewhat difficult to make a clever pun out of slender material; as you may easily perceive.—ED. CLIP.) "By universal request" we will now make some comical allusions to

THE FUNNY MAN.

Ye low comedian is a man
Who really earns his money,
For it is his most serious thought
How he can be most funny;
And he one great advantage gains
When he as comic starts,
He, though in habits, loses before,
Now shines in better parts.

The public like him, to a man,
And high his office deems—
This is, perhaps, because he treats
Them often to "high cremeens."
Should shows burst up there is no man
Who would than he care less—
He'd turn to something else—he knows
All kinds of "business."

It seems quite strange, and looks as though
The public like to chaff:
For the harder he may try to please,
The more at him they laugh;
And when before them he appears,
They ne'er with laughter flag—
We've heard them roar, although they knew
At every word he'd "say."

And yet, laugh at him as we may,
His task is ever hard;
He is a trump, one that we hope
May always prove a "card."
And may his life be one success,
And he no sor ow know,
So that he ne'er may be made feel
In any manner "low."

.....Whenever we see a "set piece" on the stage, representing a small mountain, it always reminds us of a plant that grows in Ireland, for we know it to be a sham-rock.

.....Some people have asserted that Edwin Forrest's great reliance is his voice, others his legs, etc., but we declare it to be his eyes, since he is strongest in his Lear.

.....When the Prussians left Paris for good, they put us in mind of an actor who has gone off the stage, because they retired behind the scene.....Just so, and with the same view of men and manners, we cannot help comparing a potgrand that is never in use to the weapon so feelingly alluded to by Mister Macbeth, because its a never drawn dagger.....And now, having pretty well exhausted our vocabulary of smart sayings, we will sing you a "new and original" Irish ballad, of a pleasing character, entitled,

THE SHLAG JAG, DHU!

There lives a lad of Erin,
Lookin' round upon the shly—
He was brisk and quick of hearin',
And he'd such a limpin' eye;
His hair was like the sunbeams
As he o'blessed soft and true—
"Kiss me or I'll die, alanna!
Shlag, dag, dhu!"

He met a maid a milking,
Says he, pray give a sup
Of the snowy, creamy fluid,
And your hand shall be the cup;
Or fill your rosy mouth this,
And I'll sip the mountain dew,
Cryins, "Kiss me or I'll die, alanna,
Shlag, dag, dhu!"

She sipped a sup and gave him
From her cherry mouth so free,
A kiss wid every mouthfull,
'Till he could hardly see;
Then her pail she lifted gilly,
As he vanished from her view,
Singing, "Kiss me or I'll die, alanna,
Shlag, dag, dhu!"

Her pail she lifted gilly—
Had St. Patrick's pail been there,
She'd smell, and sipt, and tasted—
It was whiskey she could swear;
And the cow had been trans-mogrified
To a still—bedad it's true!
Thus he paid for for her kiss, alanna,
"Shlag, dag, dhu!"

City Summary.

LAURA KEENE'S FOURTEENTH STREET THEATRE was opened for a limited season on Tuesday evening, April 11th, when a drama in three acts, entitled "Nobody's Child," and written expressly for Mr. William Creswick by Mr. Watts Phillips, was acted with the following cast:—

Miss Patty Lavrock..Laura Keene	Dan Hurley.....F. Dovey
Joe.....Mr. Creswick	Old John Fornie...J. S. Rooney
Sir Robert Tregarron,	Job Heldfast.....B. Jarrett
D. Van Deerin	Jim Bodmin.....E. Lewis
Captain Dudley Lazonby	Tom Paxton.....J. W. Forrest
F. Mordaunt	Leather Flap.....L. Bateman
Geo. Penryn.....M. A. Kennedy	Bob.....C. Lewis
Peter Grice.....Harry Pearson	Lucy.....Alice Brookes
Jack Adams.....E. Rainford	Mrs. Padston.....Sarah Germaine
Limping Dick...W. Davidge, Jr.

The drama had been previously acted in this city, and therefore it will not be necessary to detail its plot. It was originally produced at the new Surrey Theatre, London, Eng., September 14th, 1867, and ran a great number of nights. It is intensely melodramatic and highly improbable in its story, but it contains many telling situations and thrilling incidents. The entire scenery of the drama had been freshly painted by Messrs. Minard Lewis, Louis Dufocq and L. W. Seavey, and the setting was worthy a better jewel. The Fairy's Well, the Ravine and the Tower of Castle Tregarron are deserving of special commendation. We regret that Mr. Creswick did not select a better play for his re-appearance in America, considering the high position he held here on his previous visit, and afterwards in England, where he was selected to support Mrs. Fanny Kemble Butler on her return to the stage in 1847, appearing with her in the leading characters of the "Gamester," the "Hunchback," the "Wife" and the "Stranger." Not that we seek a repetition of those plays, but something of the sensational order of a higher degree of merit than "Nobody's Child." Mr. Creswick, though nearly fifty-eight years of age, is vigorous and active. His acting of Joe is marked with that strength of case which only years of assiduous practice can give, and throughout its performance we are reminded that an excellent artist is before us. His soft manner of speaking the English language falls upon the ear as pleasantly as the murmurings of a distant brook. His enuciation is very distinct and evinces the lack of all effort. His effects are quietly and artistically accomplished, his acting is natural and unconstrained, and his re-appearance may be chronicled as a success. Miss Laura Keene played Patty well, although the character afforded but slight scope for acting. Miss Alice Brooks' charming personal appearance and elegant costuming enhanced her careful acting of Lucy. Frank Mordaunt was happy in his portrayal of the villainous attributes of Capt. Lazonby. M. A. Kennedy was acceptable as the young lover, George Penryn. Harry Pearson, as the miserly and unscrupulous postmaster, Peter Grice, was correct and careful. W. Davidge, Jr., as Limping Dick, acted with unction. D. Van Deerin was stately and dignified as Sir Robert Tregarron, and the remaining performers did what little they had to do carefully. The attendance has been quite limited, owing in part, no doubt, to the strong attractions offered at the other theatres, and the difficulty that strangers in the city have in finding the one of which we are writing.

AT NIBLO'S GARDEN, on Monday evening, April 10th, a version of Shakespeare's historical tragedy, in five acts, entitled "The Life and Death of Richard the Third," as arranged for stage representation from the original text by Mr. Charles Calvert, manager of the Prince's Theatre, Manchester, Eng., was acted for the first time in America. It was produced with new and elaborate scenery, presenting a correct view of those portions of London where the various scenes of the tragedy were laid and at the time they transpired. The scenories were minute in detail and artistically executed. No opportunity was afforded for gaudy coloring or meretricious ornamentation, and consequently the masses found no delight therein, but to the student of Shakespeare and of history, who had formed an ideal of these scenes in his own mind, a rare treat was presented. The first scene, that of old Ludgate, with a distant view of old St. Paul's, presents an admirable opportunity to study the style of the street architecture of that period; the narrow houses, with their sharp gable roofs and bow windows stretching in the distance, were admirably painted. Chief among the other scenes may be mentioned the king's apartments; the cloisters at Westminster; a pavement in Old Chepe; the great council chamber; Baynard's castle on the Thames; Old London, near St. Paul's and Bosworth Field, three views of which were given—before the armies had encamped, after the encampment and the scene of the battle. All of these were prims in their way. The arms were equally correct. Cross bows, wooden targets or shields, bill hooks, water-sprinklers, battle axes, halberds, armors emblazoned with correct heraldic devices, for which thorough research had been made, were carefully reproduced. The costumes, upon which a vast amount of labor and research had been expended, were effective, though not as much so, perhaps, as those brought hither by Chas. Kean when he played the piece at the Park Theatre some years ago—the only difference, however, being that Mr. Kean's costumer was more fortunate in the selection of such material that would look more like the real thing under influence of gas light. In style the costumes of either revival differed but little. At the rise of the curtain the opening action of the play consisted of a Morris dance by sixteen males, which was cleverly executed, and in the first scene of the third act, as the coronation of the Duke of Gloster as King Richard III., a minuet was danced by a number of ladies, one-half of whom were costumed as males. A red cap curtain, divided in the middle, upon either half of which was emblazoned the royal arms of England in the centre thereof, while across the bottom was a border of fight color, upon which at equal distances were shields bearing various heraldic devices, was dropped at the end of each scene, while the act drop marked the termination of the various acts. This was of marked advantage, as many of the scenes were acted in front of the first or second grooves, and one behind was held until the red curtain fell, while upon its rising another equally large presented itself, and the audience perceived no movement of the performers. Thus far the representation was an unqualified success; but of the version of the play and the acting thereof we cannot conscientiously say as much. Colley Cibber's version of "Richard III" for dramatic purposes we consider one of the best acting plays ever put upon the stage, it being quick, the climaxes cunningly effected and far greater opportunity afforded all the artists for the display of histrionic skill. Shakespeare's Richard is far more effective in the closet than upon the stage. We have had so many excellent actors who have won much renown in the character of Richard, and the tragedy has been such a favorite one with the American public, and so often performed, that much attention is drawn upon the public taste by the performance of the version now under discussion may be likened unto the effect upon the palate of a dish of undressed lettuce after partaking of a highly seasoned curry. Mr. James Bennett did not appear to advantage in the character of the Duke of Gloster. He lacks ease and dignity, his articulation is, at times, indistinct, and his elocution was faulty. The portrayal of the character lacked subtlety. It may be said with regard to him, and in fact all the chief performers in the tragedy, that they were more familiar with the language of Colley Cibber's version than with Shakespeare's, which, during the early representations of the tragedy, must needs affect their acting to a certain degree. Mr. Morton acted Lord Edward with care. M. Arnold played Clarence excellently well. His delivery of the dream was a fine piece of elocution, accompanied with appropriate action, which drew from the audience the most lavish applause. Theo. Hamilton acted Hastings creditably, and L. R. Shewell, as Buckingham, was painstaking and correct, both as regards the text and acting. Neil Warner's fine physique enhanced his able personation of Richmond. John H. Jack played Lord Stanley creditably. Alex. Fitzgerald acted the First Murderer, which, in this version, is a fine part, very effectively. Miss Caroline Carson as Elizabeth, M'me Ponisi as Margaret, Mrs. Farren as the Duchess of York, and Miss Louisa Hawthorne as Lady Anne, were all good, and had evidently bestowed much thought and study upon their various roles. Little Minnie Maddern spoke the lines of the Duke of York quite intelligently. The other characters of the tragedy, too numerous to particularize, were well acted. It was evident that much care had been bestowed upon the rehearsals, and yet the performance, as a whole, is unsatisfactory, and the attendance has been comparatively limited. The taste of the present tends decidedly toward the sensational. Trashy plays, mounted with bright glittering scenery, garnished with a liberal display of the forms of finely shaped women, bedecked with gorgeous costumes, will fill the treasury, whilst the legitimate drama, carefully acted and correctly mounted, attracts a meagre, scarcely account of empty boxes," and the manager must draw upon his private purse to pay his losses. There has been much carping of late at the course pursued by the managers of Niblo's Garden, and now that the croakers have obtained their wishes what is the result? All their predictions of large audiences comprised of people of erudition and refinement have signally failed. At present the people refuse to support theatres do not want Shakespeare, Otway, Milburn, Barim or Knowles; they much prefer Robertson, Boucicault, Wilkie Collins, Byron, Gilbert or McClosky, as the box office returns will show, and any manager who will not serve the public with the pabulum they require will speedily find his bank account depleted. We had occasion in the latter part of November last to refer to two performances given at this theatre when "Hamlet" was acted on the Monday night, with Walter Montgomery, Mrs. Scott Siddons, Mme. Ponisi and other excellent artists in the cast, to an auditorium one third full, and on the following evening "As You Like It" was acted with a strong cast, and with James Mace, the champion pugilist, as Charles the Wrestler, when the auditorium was filled to overflowing, all of which we now recite in corroboration of what we have said above. For the present week Colley Cibber's version of "Richard III" will be acted. Mr. James Barrett retires, and Richard will be acted by Neil Warner. Theodore Hamilton will play Richmond; Mme. Ponisi will play Elizabeth. It is stated that the scene of the murder of Clarence will be retained, also all the scenery, costumes and effects used in the version played during the past week, as far as practicable.

OUR BROTHERS across the water who are continually carping at the bad treatment English professionals receive in America, should take a glance at New York at the present time. At Niblo's Garden Mr. James Bennett, at the Fifth Avenue Theatre, Mr. Charles Mathews, at the Fourteenth Street Theatre, Mr. William Creswick, and at Lina Edwin's, W. Horace Lingard, are performing the leading roles, leaving us only Wood's Museum, with an American actor, Mr. O. D. Byron, at the head of the bills. Wallack's is not counted, because stars are not played there.

THERE WAS LITTLE OR NO CHANGE at Bryants' Minstrels during the past week. Collins and Oakes, the new song and dance men, are rapidly gaining the favor of the audiences. Dan Bryant's artistic personation of Jeemes the poet continues in great favor, and all the performers exert themselves to give a pleasing entertainment, in which they have been successful.

FOOTE'S COMEDY, ENTITLED "THE LIAR," as condensed for the modern stage by Charles Mathews, was acted for the first time this season at Wallack's Theatre on Thursday evening, April 13th, with the following cast:—

Sir James Elliot..Owen Marlowe	John.....J. Peck
Old Wilding.....John Gilbert	William.....W. Quigley
Young Wilding.....J. G. Williamson	Miss Grantham...Mrs. C. Jennings
Papillon.....J. C. Williamson	Miss Godfrey...Miss E. Mestayer

The comedy was subjected to some slight alterations by the manager, and for picturesque effect the costumes worn were of the period of the original French play "Le Menteur." It is in two acts with one scene to each; the first being laid in a grove near St. James' Park, London, Eng., and the last, a salon in Miss Godfrey's mansion in Grosvenor Square in the same city. The sceneries were freshly painted, the costumes and appointments were new and the music freshly prepared. The hero of the piece, young Wilding, is a young gentleman of fashion moving in good society, who has a chronic habit of perverting the truth on all occasions, and seeming to take especial delight therein. His memory unfortunately is as non-retentive as his propensity for romancing. Arriving in London with an old and faithful valet, Papillon, he is accidentally thrown into the company of an unknown beauty, in St. James' Park, and true to his natural instincts, in order to gain her favor he indulges in the highest flights of fancy. Sir James, an accepted suitor of the lady, Miss Grantham, is in like manner served with an elaborate dish of fiction, in which Miss Grantham figures conspicuously though unconsciously to Young Wilding, and Sir James afterwards calls her to account for her supposed derilictions. Old Wilding now appears upon the scene and unfolds to Young Wilding a project of his own for the marriage of his son to a lady of great beauty and wealth, but does not mention her name. Young Wilding fearing this proposed union may interfere with his pursuit of the fair unknown, with his ever ready mendacity coolly announces that is already married and surrounds the cause of that event with a series of thrilling and impossible events, in which Sir James figures to a considerable extent. Old Wilding taxes his son with figuring in certain scenes—the same Young Wilding had recited to Miss Grantham and Sir James and which the latter had related to Old Wilding—when Young Wilding, ever ready to escape from the snare, denounces Sir James as a person incapable of telling the truth—that at Eton he was called the "novelist," and at college was known as the "bouncer." The act closes with this confused state of affairs. Naturally, the second is devoted in bringing to a climax Young Wilding's prevarications. He is introduced to Miss Grantham as Miss Godfrey—that being the name his valet, Papillon, gave him as designating the fair unknown of the Park—and during the conversation which ensues he disparages the charms of Miss Grantham, and acknowledges that the story of his marriage existed only in his imagination. Old Wilding appears and Lauson Young Wilding immediately signing a contract to marry Miss Godfrey, to which he assents, but upon being presented to her meets to his surprise a lady that he never saw before. Old Wilding is imperative and the young man much against his will affixes his signature, and as the lady is about to de likewise, a lady in search of young Wilding is announced and admitted. She with fearless closely veiled frantically embraces young Wilding and announces herself as the wife from Derby, the heroine of young Wilding's romance to his father in the first act. After much badinage the mask is removed and young Wilding stands in his true colors before all his assembled friends. Miss Grantham declines his hand and announces her contemplated marriage with Sir James. And as the curtain is about to fall, young Wilding declares his intention of adhering to the truth in the future, which, however, being received with derision by the characters, affords the opportunity for a neatly worded tag to the audience. Mr. Lester Wallack found in young Wilding a character most congenial to his tastes; he was sprightly, gay and dashing, and the scenes of repartee were given with much zest, which the artist seemed to enjoy as much as his auditors. He was costumed in excellent taste. Old Wilding was ably acted by Mr. John Gilbert, as was Papillon, by Mr. Williamson, who evinced much care and study in his impersonation. Mr. Marlowe was gentlemanly and courteous in Sir James Elliot, and sustained fully his reputation for correctness. Mrs. Clara Jennings acted Miss Grantham in an excellent manner and was dressed with taste. Miss Mestayer was, as usual, correct, pleasing and artistic. The comedy made a genuine hit, and Mr. Foote has made a valuable addition to his repertoire. Bayle Bernard's comedietta entitled "His Last Legs," with John Brougham as O'Callaghan, concluded the performance. The audience was very large, every seat being occupied, as well as the available standing room. This same bill was repeated on Friday evening and Saturday matinee. On Monday evening "Romance and Reality" was performed. On Tuesday the "Heir-at-Law," and on Wednesday "Birth" was acted, all for the last time. On Wednesday a matinee benefit was given to the Foundling Asylum.

AT THE GRAND OPERA HOUSE "La Pericnole" was sung for the last time on Monday evening, "La Grande Duchesse" on Tuesday and "Les Georgiennes" on Wednesday evenings shared the same fate. On Thursday evening M'lle Aimee received her first benefit in America, when she sang for the first time here the title role in "La Belle Helene." The fair beneficiary on this occasion devoted her entire share of the receipts to the benefit of suffering artists in France, a most praiseworthy act. "La Belle Helene" was repeated during the balance of the week. The usual rehearsal of Fisk Jr's Ninth Regiment Band was given on Thursday evening, and the fifteenth concert was given on Sunday evening, at which Mlle. Aimee and Miss Nully Pierce were the vocalists, and J. Levy, the cornet performer, appeared.

"THE FOOL'S REVENGE" was acted at Booth's Theatre during the entire past week except on Saturday evening, when Lawrence Barrett appeared in an original domestic drama by W. W. Young, entitled "Jonquil; or, Only a Heart," which was acted for the first time on any stage.

THE CONTINUED SUCCESS of "Across the Continent" in which O. D. Byron's excellent performance of the Ferrett is one of the chief stakes, renders no change of bill for the present. This drama has achieved a genuine success, and Mr. Byron has won much credit by his admirable acting. At the usual matinee save Saturday "The Fairies of the Enchanted Isle" was acted. On Sunday evening George Francis Train commenced a course of four lectures. The thousand and one curiosities in the museum department, to which additions are continually being made, enchain the attention of visitors during the day and between the performances.

MLLE. CHRISTINE NILSSON has renewed her contract with Max Strakosch for next season, and will appear in opera in this city in the fall, but at what theatre is yet undecided. Prof. George F. Bristow has been engaged as conductor.

"HORIZON" continues the attraction at the Olympic Theatre to fair business.

SATSUMA'S ROYAL JAPANESE TROUPE appeared at the San Francisco Minstrel Hall during the past week. The only novelty introduced was a ladder feat. A large ladder is balanced upon the shoulders of a performer, which Hala'e Kaiama ascends, and on reaching the top and perching himself upon one of the side-pieces the other side-piece and the rungs fall out, much to the surprise of the audience, leaving the little performer perched in safety above. Fair business has greeted their performances.

MR. CHARLES MATHEWS commenced an engagement at the Fifth Avenue Theatre on Monday evening, April 10th, appearing as Mr. Alfred Mopus in his own comedy, in three acts, entitled "Married for Money," and Captain Patter in the musical farce also from his pen, entitled "Patter and Clatter." Having a vivid recollection of his performance of these characters at the old Broadway Theatre in 1857, and subsequently at other theatres, where we chanced to witness his performances, we pronounce his acting at the present time wonderful. His personal appearance upon the stage is but slightly altered; his action is light, spirited and graceful as ever, and the only evidence we have of the ravages of time is a slight defect, at times, in his enunciation. In the personation of gentlemen of society Mr. Mathews excels, possessing as he does the wonderful power of producing his greatest effects seemingly unconsciously, and ignoring in toto the presence of an audience. Every word that is uttered by the other characters during the slightest reference to him is listened to apparently with as much attention as though he was hearing the language for the first time. His deportment is in every respect in keeping with the grade of society portrayed, and which could only have been learned from actual observation in private life. In the farce, by a peculiar arrangement of his wig and a slight change in his upper garments, he produces, in the presence of the audience, a complete transmogrification of his personal appearance, and by this means he was enabled to personate with effect some three or four characters. Besides these changes, rapidity of utterance of the language is almost the sole cause of humor and the merit of the farce, and it was in this latter respect that we noticed Mr. Mathews' failing powers. To those who have now witnessed his performance for the first time, it was doubtless satisfactory, but to those who distinctly remember his acting of this farce on the occasion of his previous visit, it was to a certain degree painful. Painful, because we are all more or less sensitive to the encroachments of age, and witnessing such effects in others whom we esteem, causes unpleasant reflections with regard to ourselves. Both pieces were mounted in admirable style, and were, as a whole, fairly acted. In the comedy Mrs. Gilbert, as Mrs. Mopus, was very artistic. Mr. Davidge, as Mellowboy, found that character congenial to his tastes, and acted it with consummate taste and skill. Miss Wade Dartell appeared to greater advantage as Matilda than we have hitherto seen her. Miss Kate Newton, as the pert lady's maid, was effective, and George Parkes, as Royland, was good. With the exception of Mr. Mathew's part in the farce, there was no opportunity for acting. The various persons engaged therein paid proper attention to the business set down for them, and thereby presented ensemble pieces, which was all that was required of them, as Mr. Mathews did all the acting. The auditorium has been crowded every evening during the past week and the engagement may be pronounced a success.

HARRY CUNNINGHAM, dramatic agent, 636 Broadway, has removed his office to the floor above the one formerly occupied by him. The Lawrence Troupe, variety artists, of the city of living statuary, and Johnny C. Campbell, Hugh Fay and Kate Emmett, Irish comedians and vocalists, and Routh Goshen, can be engaged through him, and he has engagements for first class variety talent. For further particulars see the advertisements.

EDWIN BOOTH being displeased, it is alleged, at some critical remarks upon his personation of the character of Richelieu recently made in this city by the dramatic journals of this city, which also contained some anecdotes touching his public doings during his early professional career in this country, recently gave orders to his attaches in the box office to refuse to sell either Mr. Augustus R. Cazauran, the writer of the article referred to, or Mr. Paul F. Nicholson, the editor of the paper, any tickets of admission. Recently, Mr. Cazauran tendered his money for payment for a ticket at the box office, at Booth's Theatre, and was told that he could not have one. Proceeding to the street he purchased a ticket for admission from a "speculator," and upon presenting it at the door he was refused admission, as the doorkeeper said, by Mr. Booth's orders. Mr. Cazauran commenced a suit against Edwin Booth, and embodying the above facts in an affidavit, which was supported or corroborated by another affidavit by Mr. Nicholson embodying a similar state of facts with regard to himself, went before Judge Brady of the Supreme Court, who granted an alternative mandamus requiring Mr. Booth to show cause on April 24th why the complaining parties shall not be allowed admission to the theatre the same as any one else on the purchase of tickets.

MR. SANFORD, of Courtney and Sanford's circus, now performing in Chili and Peru, arrived in the city during the past week. He was bearer of official dispatches from the United States legation in Chili to Washington, D. C. He has also been appointed by the government of Peru, commissioner for the United States on behalf of the international exposition to be held at Lima.

MISS CASSIE RAND made her first appearance in this city as a cantatrice at Steinway Hall on Thursday, the 13th inst., assisted by Miss Adelaide Phillips, Signors Leoni and Ronconi, and Carl Bergman. The concert was not very fully attended, but the musical selections were good and well sung, and in that respect was a success. Miss Rand's merits as a songstress lay chiefly in her sweetness of method, rather than in volume of tone, which, however, will, no doubt, be developed by practice and experience. In her duet with Signor Leoni, in "Qual Mare," by Verdi she was most pleasing, and in a quartet, from "Rigoletto," Miss Rand, Miss Phillips and Leoni and Ronconi, gave a brief musical feat that was highly appreciated. Another Rand concert was given at the same hall on the 15th.

NEWCOMB AND ARLINGTON'S MINSTRELS are announced to inaugurate their new Opera House at the corner of 28th street and Broadway this evening, Monday, April 17th. The company is announced to consist of the following performers:—William W. Newcomb, tambourine and comedian; William Arlington, tambourine and comedian; Charley Reynolds, bones; Charles Walters, song and dance; Harry Stanwood, banjoist; Willie and Tommy, clog and double song and dance; Percy and Walz, general comedians; the Daly Brothers, comic duettists, and W. H. Rice, burlesque prima donna. The sextette of vocalists was a most enjoyable indeed. The Pixleys are positive favorites, if the house of last night was any criterion to go by. To-night Mrs. F. M. Bates takes a farewell benefit, when 'East Lynne' will be presented. Mrs. B. assumes the dual role, in which she is said to be excellent. Mr. J. H. Vinson will take a benefit on Thursday evening, 6th. This is the last week of the dramatic company. The company go to Walla Walla, Washington Territory, on the 10th, returning to this city on the 17th. Mr. and Mrs. Bates go east shortly after their return.....There is talk of a new theatre being built—a good one is needed. The Beatly Troupe is in Victoria, B. C. The Vieuxtemps Bros. give another concert on the 11th inst.

HIGGINS' DRAMATIC COMPANY is billed to perform in Middletown, N. Y., April 21st, 22d, and 24th.

DURING THE PAST WEEK benefits have been the order of the day, or rather night, at the Arch Street Theatre, Philadelphia, and the present week will also be devoted to several benefits, as Mrs. E. N. Thayer, Miss May Saville, Mr. L. L. James and Mr. D. E. Ralton, appeal for the patronage of their friends and admirers. "Ours" 11th, Joseph Jefferson commences an engagement in 'Rip Van Winkle'.....At the Fourth Street Theatre Comique the great sensation of the week has been the Mallions. In their grotesque entertainment they display a suppleness of limb and a comic talent really surprising. In fact, nothing like it has ever been witnessed in Baltimore. They have, at night and at the matinees, been greeted by the liveliest enthusiasm and warmest encores by overflowing audiences. They remain, as do also the Remmelsberg Sisters, Sophie and Bettie, of the N. Y. 'Black Crook' ballet, but one week, ending Saturday, 15th. Harrigan and Hart in their Irish, Dutch and African character songs and dances, have proven very successful and made a palpable hit. The same may be said of Bowman and Harris, in their burnt cork male and female songs and dances. The Lawrence Troupe have in new and beautiful representations of living pictures appeared during the week. They take well. Messrs. Edwards, Devere, Bowman and McDowell, of the Ethiopian department, are very clever in their sketches. Edwards' character songs in black are also excellent. The waole concludes with the local drama called the 'Baltimore Newsboy.' Incidental to the piece is the rescue of the newsboy tied to the rails by a villain, just as a train of cars come thundering along at a rapid rate of speed. The railway properties were ingeniously furnished by Manager John T. Ford, of the Holiday."

KANSAS CITY DRAMATIC AFFAIRS are thus discussed by our correspondent "Casca," under date of April 12th:—"On Monday evening, April 10th, Miss Rose Evans, the young English tragedienne, appeared as Juliet in Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet. She is certainly a most exquisite and fascinating actress. I never saw Juliet more sweetly rendered, especially in the balcony scene and in the playful interview with the Nurse. The tragic scenes taxed her vocal powers to their fullest extent served claims upon public patronage of Mr. Abel. "School" was regarded at the matinee on the 15th inst., and "The Lady of Lyons," on the evening of that day, was witnessed by a large audience. Mr. W. A. Mestayer, stage manager, will have a benefit on the evening of the 27th inst., when "Two Friends" and "Married Life" will constitute the programme. Mrs. E. Edwards Lewis and Mrs. E. L. Davenport will also have benefits on the 21st and 28th inst., at this theatre.

FROM BOSTON, MASS., our correspondent sends us his usual weekly budget of theatrical news, dated April 15th, as follows:—"The Museum has given us this week a revival of Boucicault's 'Colleen Bawn,' and has been rewarded for this well doing by a series of the largest houses of the season. Every nook and corner of the cosy little house has been filled to overflowing, and every evening the placard 'standing room only' appears over the box office. The play is produced after long preparation, and every bit of scenery and appointments has been labored over faithfully, so that hardly anything in the way of improvement could be suggested. Prominent among the scenic effects are the Lakes of Killarney by moonlight in the first act, the water cave in the third act, and the ball-room in Castle Chute in the last act, all of which are exceedingly fine. The acting is in some instances remarkably fine, in others remarkably poor. Annie Clarke, as the Colleen Bawn, carries off the palm by her really superb impersonation. Barron gives a forcible piece of acting as Danny Mann. Warner, as Miles-na-Coppoleen, is rather good, though not up to his usual standard. Mrs. Vincent reaked a humorous Sheelah. But here the praise must cease, for none of the others rise above mediocrity. However, the audience is always well pleased. In fact, the revival is a decided success, and the play is likely to run for many weeks. A revival seem to be very popular just now. 'Tom Taylor's 'Ticket-of-Leave Man' has been placed in preparation, and it is underlined for speedy production. One feature of the performance this (last) week has been the first appearance of Miss Fanny Marsh, who took the part of Annie Chute.....At the Globe, Bouciault's 'Arrah na Pogue' continues to attract large houses and its performance is announced until further notice. Matinees are given on Wednesdays and Saturdays, so that the company are kept pretty busy. A slight change of cast has been made, the roles of Tim Cogan and Katty Walsh being entrusted to M. F. Sheridan and Marian Mordaunt, so that the barn door jig might become a feature. Gilbert's new comedy of 'Randall's Thumb' is in preparation and will shortly be produced. I hear that Ada Gilman, the popular soubrette of the Museum, has been engaged for next season.....As at the Boston Theatre has been occupied by the French Fair during the week, the company belonging to the establishment has been transferred to the Olympic Theatre, and has presented during the week the popular bill of 'Under the Gaslight' and the 'Happy Man.' The houses have been quite small, but the entertainment has been excellent.....At the Howard the entertainment has been strengthened by the appearance of Maffit and Bartholomew in the burlesque of 'Jack the Giant Killer; or, The Monster of St. Michael.' Otherwise the company remains pretty nearly as it was last week.....Charles Fecuter and Miss Leclercq are still in the city, stopping at the St. James.....Walter Montgomery is also still here.....Stuart Robson has returned from Cincinnati, O., and is making Boston his headquarters.....Lucille Western has been visiting her Boston friends and resting herself previous to her tour through the New York and New England circuit."

CINCINNATI, O., THEATRICALS, up to April 14th, are detailed to the following effect by our correspondent:—"At Wood's Theatre Stuart Robson has been succeeded this week by the irrepressible Little Lotta, who opened on Monday night to a splendid house, notwithstanding the presence of the Richings Opera Troupe at Mozart Hall. The bill, which consisted of the protean drama of the 'Little Detective,' proved sufficiently attractive to run four nights to a big business. With the exception of 'Little Nell,' Lotta figures to better advantage in the character of Florence Langton than in any of her other roles, and the play, though a trifle old, is not devoid of merit, being an English drama doctored up for Lotta by Robert McWade. She has great chances to display her powers of versatility, assuming in succession five disguise parts—Grizzle Guthridge, Mrs. Gammage, Harry Rocket, an unpronounceable Dutch character, and Barney O'Brien, in which impersonations she rings in her banjo business, ballads, songs and dances, Irish and Dutch and Irish songs. The exact propriety of all this is not very palpable, but like Mercutio's wound it answers—and answers well. Roderick Tracy, a poorly drawn detective, was well taken by Burroughs; Lodovic was rendered humorous by Locke, and Forsberg made a capital character of Barry Mallison. The female characters were all well performed by Mrs. Chambers and the Misses Bailey and Chambers. To-night, for her benefit, Lotta plays Paul and Nan, in the 'Pet of the Petticoats' and 'Good for Nothing.' Next week she remains, producing her new drama, 'Heart's Ease,' the first three nights, and 'Little Nell' the balance of the week. Mr. Harold Forsberg, of the company at this theatre, has engaged for Trimble's Opera House, Albany, for next year. Mr. Burroughs will probably remain here, where he is very well liked, and Mr. E. A. Locke plays low comedy for the Chapman Combination. Charlotte Crampton and Hannah E. Bailey are to support the amateurs at the National to-night, in 'Othello,' for Maurice Neville's benefit.....Neville will probably have a crowded house at the National to-night, and I think the play of 'Othello' will be rendered much better than is anticipated. Mr. Neville's style of reading and acting very much resembles Fechter's. I heard a portion of the rehearsal this morning, and think the Amateurs will do finely. The following is the full cast:—Otheło, Maurice Neville; Iago, Jas. E. Sherwood; Cassio Theo. A. Blinn; Brabantio, C. Ridge; Duke, D. F. Wallace; Roderigo, Frank Harvey; Montano, John Meagher; Gratiano, T. D. Williams; Ludovico, H. Nielert; Antonio, J. L. Boake; Leonardo, R. E. Taylor; Desdemona, Miss H. E. Bailey; Emilia, Charlotte Crampton; Senators—W. C. Crosby, Wm. Boake and others. Messrs. Sherwood, Meagher and Boake are well known in base ball circles as former members of the first nine of the Buckeye Club....."

THE TRIMBLE OPERA TROUPE of Pike's Music Hall into a regular opera house, of which I made mention some months ago, has at length began, and will be completed by June. A stage, 41x40 ft. will be constructed and all the scenery is to be painted on thin iron, to be unrolled from the top.....Plans for the alteration of Mozart Hall into a regular theatre, to be located on the ground floor of the building, are also in the hands of the architect. Of this more anon.

MISS FANNY B. PRICE, supported by a good stock company, on April 10th commenced a three nights season at the Opera House in Springfield, Ill., concerning which our correspondent, writing under date of April 13th, says:—"The company was organized in this city by Mr. D. Hanchett and is comprised of the following named artists:—Miss Fanny B. Price, D. Hanchett, Con. T. Murphy, Albert Casper, Alvin Wight, Jas. E. Howard, Miss Mellie Denin, Mrs. C. C. Jordan and Miss Hanchett. On Monday evening 'Nobody's Daughter' was presented. Miss Price in the triple characters was very fine; first, Jenny Milsom, the poor ballad singer, then raised by a sudden turn of fortune to the high position of Lady Eversleigh and afterwards in the character of Mme. Brewer, in the rendering of which she proved herself to be an excellent actress. Con. T. Murphy, an old Springfield favorite, gave a most excellent piece of acting in the part of Victor Carrington. Albert Casper, as Black Milsom, was good, as was also the character of Sir Oswald Eversleigh as played by C. B. Howard. Edwin Wight, in the jolly character of Dennis Wild, was immense, and he was quite at home with our theatre-goers. On the second evening Miss Price appeared in the difficult character of Frou Frou, and fully sustained the good impression she made on the first evening. Murphy, as Henri De Sartorys was particularly fine. Howard, Casper, Wight, Mrs. Jordan and Miss Hanchett were all very good in their respective roles. The opening of 'The Colleen Bawn' was given in an excellent manner. Miss Price, as Jenny Learoyd, was very much admired. Mr. Murphy gave a good rendition of the character of Jem Starke. The company taken altogether is a good one. They go from this place to Decatur, playing there on the 13th, 14th and 15th, and open on Monday the 17th at the Opera House in Terre Haute, Ind., for one week.....To-morrow night the Sisters Sophie and Jennie—open for two nights and a matinee. The first night 'The Field of the Cloth of Gold' will be given, and on Saturday afternoon 'Rip Van Winkle' will be played, and at night the programme will consist of 'The Girl of the Period' and 'Nan the Good for Nothing.'.....On the 17th, Carhart & Co.'s dramatic company are billed to appear at the Opera House for one week."

DRAMATIC AFFAIRS IN ALBANY, N. Y., are thus reported by our correspondent "Mercutio" writing under date of April 15th:—"Johnny Allen, at the Academy of Music, has drawn but fair houses during the past week. The drama of 'Schneider' contains considerable merit. Mr. Allen's Schneider was very good, while his singing and dancing are excellent, but cut it out and give us new two nights on account of a severe cold. Mr. J. H. Ferris was decidedly stagey as Dick Fairchilds. The part of Robert Thornton was acceptably filled by Geo. Johnson; Mr. E. G. Packard was fair as Tom Cranshaw, Mr. G. C. Davenport appeared as Bob Brettles, Mr. S. L. Knapp as Dr. Bolus, Mr. J. R. Grismer as Jim Slocum, and did justice to their parts. Miss Henrietta Osborne is deserving of praise for the excellent manner in which she filled the part of Mary Cranshaw. Miss Laura Paige, a new face in this city, appeared in the role of Louisa Schneider. She is a fine actress and is worthy of favorable mention. Gracie Kiernan did well as Little Louisa Schneider. For the benefit of Mr. Allen, the bespoke night, the 14th, the farce of 'Paddy Miles' Boy.' Mr. D., as an Irish comedian, is far above the general average. Mr. Allen closes his engagement to-night (15th). On the 17th, the Great Novelty Troupe open with Billy Pastor, Ada Tessman, Maggie Nichols, Minnie Wells, Ida Madigan, Jennie McClennan, James Roome, James Gaynor, Master Martin and the Irish comedian, O'Kay.....Mr. and Mrs. Barney Williams have had fair houses this week at the Trimble Opera House. The 'Emerald Ring' has been the chief attraction, Mr. and Mrs. Williams in the characters of Mike and Maggie Macarty. Mr. Street as Sir Oscar O'Niel and Mr. Webster as Walter Brady, were good in their respective roles. Walter Keeble did exceedingly well as Deadlight. Mr. P. Stoner appeared as Brabason Pawney, Mr. Stoddart as Sidney Lofius, Mrs. Stoddart as Geraldine, Mrs. Ryan as Mrs. Macarthy. The scenery, by Harley Merry, was artistic. On the 17th Mr. B. L. Mallack opens here in McCloskey's drama of 'Through by Daylight.' Mr. and Mrs. Harry Clifford have severed their connection with this establishment. The company at the Trimble Opera House is now short a first low comedian, chambermaid, a second old man, and general utility people.....Mrs. C. A. Watkins opens at Martin Hall on the 18th with 'Camille,' herself in the title role, and Mr. Frank Roche as Armand. The latest sensation, 'Jezebel,' will be produced. Among the company engaged to support Mrs. Watkins are S. L. Knapp, W. H. Hamblin, G. H. Harrison, Charles Hilliard, Mrs. Van Deerin, the Misses Florence Noble, Ethe Johns and Lizzie Mahon. 'Camille' matinees on the 19th. Mr. S. L. Knapp is stage manager.

THE PARK THEATRE, Brooklyn, has been crowded during the past week, Mr. McCloskey's sensation play of "Pomp" being the attraction, the author playing Pomp. Sr., while Mr. Campbell, personated the hero of the drama. "Pomp" is to be succeeded by the English drama entitled "Not Guilty," in which Mr. and Mrs. Conway will make their re-appearance. On the 18th Mr. Carro.l takes a benefit, and on the 21st Mrs. Bates is to be the beneficiaire.

MRS. RAINFORD, first old lady; Minnie Rainford, walking lady, and Clara Rainford, second chambermaid, advertise that they can be engaged.

DAVIS & CO., theatrical agents, Cincinnati, O., whose card is in another column, want a lady vocalist and pianist, and they would like to hear from theatrical, minstrel and variety performers.

ARTISTS desiring engagements for 1871 and '72 and a band leader are referred to Post & Loomis' card elsewhere.

GEO. HULMAN, manager of the Royal Lyceum, Toronto, Canada, states, through a card, that he is prepared to negotiate with stars desiring short engagements in May or June, and with stock artists for the season of 1871 and '72. He is also prepared to let the house during the months of July and August.

PHILIP BRUNER advertises that he has a new drama, entitled "The Foundling of the Arno," which he wishes to dispose of.

BIDWELL'S DRAMATIC COMPANY commenced a five nights' season in Bangor, Me., April 11th. Miss Dollie Bidwell was the leading attraction.

MISS IDA VERNON commenced a season of three nights at the opera house, Bridgeport, Conn., on April 13th, supported by a good company, under the management of D. D. Lacina. Our correspondent, writing on the 14th, says: "'Fron-Fron' was played on the 13th, and 'Leah, the Forsaken,' on the 14th. This, Saturday evening, 15th, Miss Vernon takes a benefit, on which occasion 'Ingomar, the Barbarian,' will be produced, Miss Vernon appearing as Parthenia and Mr. Mark Bates as Ingomar.....Maggie Mitchell appears at the opera house for two nights, 21st and 22d, under the management of Lowell & Simmonds, playing 'Fanchon on the 21st, and the 'Little Barefoot' on the 22d."

AMUSEMENTS IN CHICAGO, ILL., have not been in as flourishing a condition the past week, as is generally the case at this season of the year, writes our correspondent, under date of April 14th. "The talented young actor, Mr. Frank Mayo, is in his second and last week at McVicker's Theatre, but I regret to say, for some unaccountable reason, is not meeting with even moderate success. He has appeared during the week in his specialty, the role of Badger, in the sensational play, the 'Streets of New York,' and is giving us a very strong and spirited specimen of character acting, full of excitement. Mr. Becks' Bloodgood, Loomis as Livingston, Russell's Paul, Hight as Putty, Everham's Dan, Stanley as the Newsboy, Mrs. Cornell's Alida, Mrs. Myers' Lucy, Mrs. Jamison as Mrs. Putty, and Mrs. Florence as Mrs. Fairweather are all clever impersonations. The play is well mounted; the fire scene, of course, the central point of interest. Mr. Dick Ralph opens in John Brougham's new play of the 'Minstrel Boy' on the 17th.....Benedix seem to be the order at Aiken's Museum this week. The very excellent and deservedly popular leading lady, Mrs. Octavia Allen, put forth her claim on Monday evening, and despite the threatening aspect of the weather her many friends rallied and gave her a substantial benefit. During the evening Mrs. A. opened as Arline in 'The Rose of Killarney' and as Mrs. Honeyton in 'The Happy Pair.' In each piece she acquitted herself in the most commendable manner. 'The Dead Shot' in which Messrs. Jennings, Fawcett, Soggs, Misses Oiner and Katie Mayhew displayed some fine acting, concluded the interesting performances. 'The Raising of Paris,' was produced on Thursday evening. Mrs. Clara Stoneall, a very deserving actress, was up for a benefit the following evening, presenting 'Dreams of Delusion,' 'The Clockmaker's Hat' and 'Boots at the Swan.' The occasion was made doubly pleasant by the appearance of the favorite actor, Joseph Wheelock, of McVicker's, in the role of Sir Bernard Plantagenet in 'Dreaming Jo Death' and the first appearance in two years of Miss Alice Holland as Betty Martin. Mr. Wheelock's acting was very effective throughout the entire play, and at the close he was honored with a call before the curtain. He was ably seconded by Mrs. Allen, Susie Oiner and Mr. Jennings. Miss Holland's appearance was the signal for a perfect ovation. She was as pleasing as ever, and though she has not grown rusty in the least during her absence from the boards. The entire performance passed off with credit to the company. The Museum specialty, the 'Ticket of Leave Man,' was revived last evening, to allow Mr. W. Eden, a noted barber of this city, an opportunity to display himself in the role of Green Jones. For a novice he acquitted himself creditably; but we should advise him to stick to his hair-dressing business, as he will find it more profitable in the end, and certainly more benedcial to the theatre goers. Mr. Padgett's benefit takes place this evening, 'Damon and Pythias' constituting the bill. Mr. J. C. Campbell appears on the 17th in 'Pomp.'

MARIAN TAYLOR, burlesque artist and comedienne, can be engaged through her agent, Col. T. A. Brown.

A LEADING MAN, a good old man, and several other artists are wanted by McKean Buchanan for the season of 1871 and '72. Address as per advertisement.

THE SAVANNAH THEATRE is advertised to rent for the balance of the season.

MCKEAN BUCHANAN appeared in Knoxville, Tenn., on April 10th, and the Daily Press and Herald of the 11th publishes the following notice of his performance:—

MCKEAN BUCHANAN.—The three tragedians of the age are Forrest, Booth and McKean Buchanan. Where Forrest could not find room enough to leap about and display his athletism, Buchanan found room to do some of the best acting we exhibited on a Knoxville stage, and so it is that we are enabled to state the richest intellectual treat ever offered to the Knoxville public was presented last night in the performance of "Richelieu" by McKean Buchanan, at Staub's Hall. The audience was composed of our citizens, and while Mr Buchanan may not have seen in it as many splendid toilets as in a Boston or New York audience, he has the satisfaction of knowing that his faithful and startling rendition of the part was received by as critical an assembly as could be gathered in either of those cities, with entire satisfaction.

THE ZAVISTOWSKI SISTERS, at present performing in San Francisco, are noticed as follows by the press of that city:—The Zavistowskis having received on Saturday, the 8th, a complimentary benefit at this theatre in the spectacular extravaganza entitled "Paris; or, The Apple of Discord." We deem it almost needless to say that the house was crowded to excess; that the boxes and dress circle were filled with the elite of le creme of our society, and that the reception accorded the fair sisters partook of the nature of an ovation. The piece was well mounted and strongly cast. The beautiful and charming sisters, the brilliant Emeline, the arch Alice and the agile Charlotte, sung and danced as delightfully as during their first visit to our most fortunate city and were showered with floral tributes to their artistic merits, and rewarded with enthusiastic applause for any extra display of abandon.

Musical.

THE GRAND ENGLISH OPERA COMBINATION of C. D. Hess & Co. opened at Mozart Hall, Cincinnati, on Monday, 10th, in "Il Trovatore," to a fine house, and the audiences all through the week were good, according to our correspondent, who says:—"The bulletin for the rest of the week has been 'Bohemian Girl,' on Tuesday; 'Fidelio,' Wednesday; 'Marriage of Figaro,' Thursday; 'Huguenots,' Friday; 'Martha,' Saturday matinee, and 'Der Freischutz,' evening. Mrs. Bernard appeared as Leonora on Monday, and as Fidelio on Wednesday, and is to be Valentine to-night (Friday), and Lady Harriet to-morrow. Her acting has been good, and she displays great lyric powers. Rose Hersee, as Arline on Tuesday, and Countess on Thursday, won everybody by her sweet singing. Emma Howson has also made a favorable impression, being pretty and arch, though her voice lacks the volume and range of the other two. Mr. Castle is as silver toned as ever, and Mr. Brookhouse Bowler seems to have improved in his singing. As Thaddeus in the 'Bohemian Girl' he made quite a hit. Mrs. Seguin's contralto parts of Azucena and Cherubino have both been brilliant successes. S. C. Campbell has not been in very good voice this week, suffering somewhat from a cold. Henry Drayton has been very effective in his roles, and Messrs. Seguin, Chatterson and Howell have done well, as also may be said of Miss Fannie Goodwin. The choruses are fair and the instrumentation very good. The success of the troupe has encouraged them to remain four nights of next week. From here they go to Louisville, Ky., where they will open on Friday, 21st. The gentlemen of the company contemplate a cricket match next week with the Union Club of this city.....A concert was given at Pike's Music Hall, Cincinnati, on the 10th by Mrs. Edmund Dexter and others."

MISS JENNY STRONG, contralto, recently joined the Continental Vocalists in Deparice, Mich. We have received the names of a number of towns this troupe proposes to visit, but no dates, therefore they are useless.

THE MENDELSSOHN QUINTETTE CLUB, assisted by Mrs. J. W. Weston, are billed to give a concert in Quincy, Ill., April 17th.

BLIND TOM performed in Masonic Temple, Louisville, Ky., April 14th and 15th.

MR. CHARLES SUES, an amateur, had a complimentary concert in the Masonic Temple, Louisville, Ky., April 12th, when he was assisted by Miss Hattie Rothschild, Messrs. Eddy Bauer, Green Anderson, John T. Camp, the blind boy, and Will S. Hays.

GEORGE RAE, second violinist and alto horn player, advertises that he can be engaged after April 24th.

T. G. CANHAM, leader of brass and string bands, advertises that he can be engaged.

A TENOR SINGER and an alto horn player are wanted for Dupree & Benedict's Minstrels. Address Charles H. Dupree as per advertisement.

THE CHIEF MUSICAL EVENT in Syracuse, N. Y., during the past week has been a series of comic operas at the Wieting Opera House, by the American Comic Opera Troupe, under the management of Messrs. Rorabock & Harrell, commencing on the 10th with Julius Eichberg's "Doctor of Alcantara" to only a fair house. Miss Laman Taylor was engaged to play Serafina, Agnes Lake Angel and Miss Nellie E. Knapp, of Boston, appeared as Isabella; the balance of the cast was made up mostly from amateur musical talent of this place. Miss Taylor made a good impression, and Miss Knapp was well received. Both ladies met with hearty encores. The opera passed off smoothly for a first night. On Wednesday, the 12th, Eichberg's "Two Cadys" and the Tower scene from "Il Trovatore" was the bill. Miss Knapp as Leonora, and Mr. Frank Rorabock, as Manrico, made a capital hit. Mr. Rorabock's performance was very good indeed. On Thursday, the 13th, the "Doctor of Alcantara" was repeated, with the same cast. Mr. S. L. Harrell, as Doctor Parsceaus, was clever indeed, and made the hit of the evening. The series closed on Friday, the 14th, with a testimonial benefit was offered them, which came off to a crowded house on Saturday evening, the 15th. This troupe intend to make a tour west this spring. So writes our correspondent.

THE BERGER FAMILY, Swiss Bell Ringers, commenced a series of four performances in St. Louis, Mo., on April 12th

Variety Halls.

JOHN DENIER'S GAIETY COMIQUE TROUPE performed in Jamestown, N. Y., April 12th and 13th. Frank Bell left this company in Erie, Pa., and his place was supplied by N. B. Shimer. While performing in Tideoute, Pa., on April 4th, John Denier was presented with a handsome gold medal, suitably inscribed, by Mr. James Parshall, who built and owns the Parshall Opera House in Titusville, Pa.

MISS POLLY DALY, Guilfoil and Rouke and Billy Allen were the chief attractions at the Walnut Street Theatre, Kansas City, Mo., during the past week.

HEYWOOD, CHIRISKI AND WELCH'S EUROPEAN VARIETIES will travel during the summer months through the eastern states under canvas. They have a number of advertisements in this issue, to which we would call the attention of our readers.

WASHBURN'S LAST SENSATION is billed to perform in Herkimer, N. Y., April 25th; Ilion, 26th; Little Falls, 27th; Fort Plain, 28th; Gloversville, 29th; Johnston, 31st; Amsterdam, May 1st; Schenectady, 2d; Cohoes, 3d and 4th.

THE MAMMOTH TROUPE, consisting of a select company of variety artists, will start on a third western tour about May 20th. Wm. Marsh, the manager, can be addressed care of this office.

STERRITT'S OPERA HOUSE, a small institution, in Portland, Oregon, opened on March 29th to a crammed house. The company consists of Charley Nickerson, comedian; Cogell and Cooper, song and dance men; Frank Howard, buffoonist; Hughey Morton, general variety business; Cose Downing, violinist; Fanny Webster, Eva Clayton, Lizzie LeDay and Louise Somers. The style of performances is similar to that given in variety halls, though of an inferior order. The admission is steep for the character of the entertainment—50 cents. So writes our correspondent on April 4th.

WITH THE ADVENT OF EASTER business at the Metropolitan Hall, Washington, D. C., improved considerably, writes our correspondent "Novice:"—Ben Wheeler, Irish comedian, Master Beanie, Miss Eliza DeConrcy and Tommy Winnets have all been well received, and the company is now much stronger than it has been for some time. Minnie Gray has re-appeared, and will not go with a circus after all. Iona Laing continues to meet with favor. In the first part she sings the 'Refugee,' and afterwards in the olio, 'All amongst the Hay,' (wherein she drops the h about as frequently as it occurs) 'Cliquot' and 'Pretty Little Flora.' Ben Wheeler has proved to be a valuable acquisition to the company. During the past week he sang a ballad called the 'Miller's song,' and it was so well done that an encore each evening was the result. In the second part of the entertainment he introduced Irish songs, the rendition of which at once paced him in favor with his auditors. He also appeared in the sketch called 'Barney's Courtship,' Miss De Courcy lending assistance in the character of Molly Tyrell. Master Beanie is a very talented little fellow indeed. He sings remarkably well and executes changes very rapidly. Mr. Winnets does a song and dance very cleverly, but in his end business there is abundance of room for improvement. Master George Brooks, a very funny little chap, and a good performer, has appeared on the tambourine end and made quite a hit. Miss Lizzie Tonnett, of this city, died on the 6th instant, after a very brief illness. She was not a member of the profession but had many friends among variety performers. Miss Tonnett was betrothed to Mr. James Porter, the stage manager of the Metropolitan, and the marriage was to have taken place at an early day.

ARMALINTOS A "JOLLY CORK."—A correspondent in Philadelphia sends us the following account of a "little mix-up" which occurred in that city a few nights ago:—"We have to record another unprovoked assault upon a quiet and unassuming citizen of the 'City of Brotherly Love' by Mr. Joseph M. Mortimer, one of the proprietors of the Philadelphia Varieties, and a prominent member and officer of the Order of Elks in that city, being the victim. Shortly after midnight on the 12th inst. Mr. Mortimer, accompanied by Mr. G. W. Herbert, the treasurer of the Varieties, started for his residence at No. 617 Walnut street, near by which he found 'Dutch' Ahearn and several others. Mr. Mortimer, as he passed Ahearn, said 'good evening,' and ascended the steps of his residence, when the latter, it is alleged, saying:—'You are one of these —— Elks, and I have been gunning for you,' committed an assault upon Mr. Mortimer with a pair of brass knuckles; in the operation several of the party, it is alleged, assisting in the attack, not only upon Mr. Mortimer but upon Mr. Herbert. Mr. Mortimer was severely beaten about the face. A couple of policemen standing close by manifested no disposition to interfere in the 'amusement,' Mr. Mortimer never had any quarrel with Ahearn, and the only reason he can ascribe for the unprovoked assault is the fact of a brother of his being refused admittance as a member of the Order of Elks. Mr. Mortimer is now able to be about. Recorder Given, on the 13th inst., issued a warrant for the arrest of Ahearn."

THE THEATRE COMIQUE in Petersburg, Va., closed on April 15th, for the season. The present proprietors intend starting on a traveling tour under canvas from Baltimore, Md., about May 1st. The following members of the present company, a correspondent informs us, are already engaged. Messrs. Murray, Laughlin, Orme, Quincy, Vachon, Zavallee, Poythress, Davis, Hudgins and Mlle Carolista. Other artists will be secured. Messrs. Collier, Brown and Criswell are proprietors, and Thomas G. Leath agent. Murray, Laughlin and Orme open in Norfolk, Va., on April 17th to remain until the above company starts from Baltimore.

AT THE NEW PHILADELPHIA VARIETIES Miss Jennie Benson made her first appearance on the 10th instant, and her excellent dancing deservedly made one of the most prominent and attractive features of the programme. Billy Barry appeared as the Active Girl, and his eccentric and laughable style of dancing won for him marked approval. Mlle. Venturoli nightly receives great applause for her lively and graceful dancing in the ballet of "The Fire Fiend," in which she is assisted by a well selected corps de ballet. The serio-comic duets of the Freeman Sisters are most ably rendered. The Female Minstrels, the serio-comic singing of Miss Blanche Stanley, and the eccentricities displayed by Billy Barry, Dick Parker and Tony Harvey, Ethiopian comedians, forming the other leading features of last week's programme, which terminated with the burlesque of the "Corsican Brothers," in Miss Lizzie Freeman creditably sustaining the character of Prince Meander in the burlesque, singing and acting with much animation. During the present week an attractive programme will be presented, concluding with the drama of "Jack Sheppard." Charley Gardiner and Tom Haywood have been added to the already large company, and will make their first appearance at this establishment on the 17th inst.

THE ATTENDANCE during the past week at Sanford's New Opera House, Philadelphia, has been quite large. The chief features of the programme were Orville Ritcher's comic singing and Ethiopian specialties; Harry and Fanny Wood in their songs and dances; Rose Teasdale in her serio-comic songs, and Miss Julia Sanford in several favorite dances. The veteran Sam Sanford appeared in his specialty of "Villkins and Dinah," and J. E. Dougherty and Paul Berger were very amusing in the interludes of "Farmers at the Bull's Head" and "Blunders of Marriage." Sam Sanford and his Ethiopian troupe will give their "Old Songs and Old Minstrelsy" programme on the 24th inst.

AT HOWARD'S, Philadelphia, the reconstructed Canean is nightly given in "Paris by Gaslight." Dan Howard, Joe Mack, Billy Wright, Kate Moreste, Mary Lagrange, Mlle. Georgia and Sallie St. Clair are with the company. Wilson and Kernell, song and dance men, make their first appearance here on the 17th inst.

CINCINNATI, O., VARIETY NEWS runs as follows, as furnished to the 14th by our correspondent:—"There were three new faces at the Race Street Varieties this week, Miss Chrissie Morrell, vocalist; Miss Lottie Georgia, who has returned from a southern trip; and Miss Nellie Halloway, balladist. The first named lady is entirely new to this city, and has made an excellent impression, being gifted with a very sweet voice, and evidently possessing considerable knowledge of music. Lottie Georgia is a favorite at this theatre, both in sensation songs and a song and dance, which she does cleverly. Nellie Halloway is also well known here, having played at the Winter Garden before it burned down. Mlle. G. Barlow, the new end man, takes extremely well, and, with Lew Cavana, makes a good comic team. He also gives a good Dutch character song. In the female minstrel scene, Mollie Melville, the arch Alice and the agile Charlotte, Nellie Halloway, Chrissie Morrell and Eloise Biggs appear. A local piece, called the 'Queen City by Moonlight,' is now on for the wind up, the main attractions of which are the inevitable Can-can dances and the statuary representations of Annie W. Hill. Ed. Morley, the 'talking hand' performer, closed his engagement at this place on Saturday evening last, and left for Chicago, where he intends to settle. There have been several changes in the company at the Pacific Garden. Gibbonoise, the contortionist, left with P. H. Seamon to join Hemming and Cooper's circus, at Louisville. One of the Davenport brothers has joined the James Rodinson show, the other still remaining, as does also Prof. Francis, the juggler. Art Holston, female personator, has been engaged at the Pacific Saloon.....At the Apollo Hall there were two fresh faces this week, Charley Sullivan, Dutch, Irish and Ethiopian comedian, and Miss Mollie Devon, song and dance lady, who has of late been playing at the Race Street. M. A. Grimn is the stage manager here.....Mr. Ned Reed is in charge of the Brighton Varieties, a rather diminutive hall, in the upper part of the city.....Johnny Berkely is also here in town, seeking medical advice for a lung disease, which has quite prostrated him. His brother, Mike Conner ('Cincinnatus'), a clever song and dance artist, is also here, but is to open at one of the New York halls on Monday, 24th."

ALL THE VARIETY HALLS in St. Louis, Mo., says our correspondent, "Pagra," "are doing a rushing business. At the Varieties Theatre the spectacle of 'The Eri King' entered upon its fourth week, announced as its last, on Monday, the 10th inst. Since its first production good houses have been the order. Next week variety will again take possession of the boards and many new people will appear. Miss Sallie Mason, for so many years the soubrette of this house, departed this week under engagement at the Front Street Theatre, Baltimore, Md.....There is almost an entire change of company at Scott's New Varieties this week, Jimmy Quinn, banjoist, and Niel Rogers, general performer, having left for Kansas with Kansas City and re-opened. Mrs. Louisa Shaw, comedienne, opened two weeks since, and Nellie Raymond, Scottish Nightingale, commenced Sunday, the 9th. George Wild and Mlle Leoline are also new, having opened since my last communication. Senor Zegrino, the 'Fire King,' who does some trapeze business and makes a leap through a loop of fire, is the attraction at Wild's this week. Among favorites who remain are Miss Agnes, who is a sweet singer and very popular, and Nellie Belmont, whose vocalisms are of the light and sensational order. Tom Clannon still remains. Fred. T. Shaw retains his position as stage manager. W. Florence and H. Morehart are the musicians.....Joe Henry's Sixth Street Varieties continues to do a good business, the audiences on Saturday and Sunday nights the building is so crowded that people are turned away, unable to obtain admission. The new people here are Mr. E. F. Barnes, stage manager, and Dan Brooks, comedian. Several more are announced to open next week, consisting of Joe Woods, Etie Barker, Frank Mack and Bob Frayne. A good bill was presented on Sunday, the 9th inst., when the double clog of Messrs. Rivers and Brooks was a good feature, as was also the burlesque sleight-of-hand performance of Billy Rivers. Little Mary is excellent in her songs, and in her songs and dances. While singing 'Little Barefoot' Sunday night she had nearly seven dollars in silver and nickels thrown to her on the stage. Ned Ainsley is in his best vein, and is engaged by Manager Agnew Lake to do Mazeppa with Lake's Circus the coming summer.....At Hart's Varieties, Billy Burton assumed the stage management last week in place of A. S. Caspar, who went to join Fanny Price at Springfield for leading heavies. Johnny Murphy still shows his laughter provoking face, and is as much liked as any performer in the city. Minnie Lindgren opened on the 10th inst., and with her Carlton does a Zouave drill act, which is quite good. Charlie lloyd, song and dance artist, has returned from Peoria and appears nightly in his specialties. Jimmy Sutherland is a new acquisition in the song and dance line and is well received. La Petite Hensley remains, as well as Frances Nevird, danseuse. The double dancing of Boyd and Nichols is fine, and Hart's Irish vocalisms receive deserved applause. Several new faces will open here next week, including Katy St. Leon, danseuse. Business is excellent.....Frank Frayne and Miss Clara Butler were in town last week.....Billy Diamond, the happy old man and negro comedian, is here.....Johnny Berkely leaves this week for Memphis to open with Broom.

VARIETY TALENT of all kinds, burlesque and pantomime troupes wanting engagements, are referred to Messrs. Hart and Spencer's card elsewhere.

SMITH'S OPERA HOUSE, East Saginaw, Mich., is said to be doing a good business. Talent is wanted for this house.

BALLET LADIES are wanted for Mozart Hall, Buffalo, N. Y. See advertisement.

BOBBY STANTON and the Little General can be addressed at Thompson's Opera House, Vicksburg, Miss., where they are at present performing.

LADY VOCALISTS and dancseuses are advertised for by the proprietors of Fielding's Opera House, Toledo, Ohio.

THE VARIETY THEATRE in Peoria, Ill., is reported by a correspondent as doing a flourishing business. Miss Flora Belle, Buckin and Crouse, the latter end men, were the chief attractions of the past week. Our correspondent sends a list of the names of the performers engaged, but neglects to state their lines of business or to make any comments upon their performances.

THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC, Grand Rapids, Mich., which was one of the three theatres occupying an Empire Block, was totally destroyed by fire at half-past nine o'clock on the evening of Tuesday, April 11th. The properties and the wardrobes of the performers were saved with considerable difficulty, and the performers barely had time to escape, so rapidly did the flames spread.....At the Opera House during the past week a burlesque written by Leon Wetherby, and entitled "Uncle Tom-Kin-Kan; or, The Secret's Betrayal," has proved an immense card. The new additions to the company were the Misses Emma Marsh, Louie Irving and Donnole, the mimic. Adams and Bartine closed their engagements on the 15th and left for Chicago. Saturday matinees are now given here, which are largely attended by ladies and children. So writes our correspondent, "Eureka."

AT HART'S OPERA HOUSE, Vicksburg, Miss., wrote a correspondent on April 12th, "the attraction for the past (this) week have been big and business good. Collins and Eunice opened April 10th with their original English 'Punch and Judy,' which proved a hit. Sam Collins, in his sketch of 'Dutch Justice,' was good, also Frank Dillon and Bobby Stanton, as the two attorneys, kept the house in excitement. The other portions of the bill were well filled. Maggie Mayburg is a good singer, and has made lots of friends. New faces will appear next (this) week."

BUSINESS AT THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC, Nashville, Tenn., states our correspondent "Landry," has been tolerable for the past two weeks. The only new faces appearing were the Burgess Brothers, Blood and Griffin, who sang and danced well. Nellie Georgia is still at this house, also Mollie Melville, who form a very attractive feature in the bills by their songs, dances, and burlesques. The programme for last night, 12th, was entertaining, consisting of the parlor entertainment, varieties, and winding up with a burlesque by the company. The negro acts of the Burgess Brothers, Blood and Griffin, were funny, while the banjo duet of Geo. Burgess and Harry Blood was loudly encored. Another prominent feature in the programme was Nellie Georgia and Mollie Melville's double song and dance, and Kate Leslie's ballads. Mollie Russell puts in an appearance on Monday, the 17th inst. Sig. Gus Peters and Mlle Annette are also engaged and will shortly appear.

ALBERT GILBERT, burlesque artist and character vocalist, can be addressed care of this office.

THE WALHALLA TROUPE will be at liberty after April 30th, and can be engaged through their agent, Col. T. A. Brown.

AT WELCH'S VARIETIES, Syracuse, N. Y., Millie Tremont and Alice Wray are the cards. Our correspondent says: "A good stock company has succeeded in acceptably filling the bills for the week. Gus Williams and Mr. Blackburn, with his trained dogs, are announced for next week. On account of other attractions in town the business has been very fair."

THE THEATRE OF THE TERRACE, Buffalo, N. Y., is undergoing a complete renovation, and will shortly be opened by Mr. Dan Shelby as a variety hall, to be known as Shelby's Comique.

AT FIELDING'S OPERA HOUSE, Toledo, O., the company that appeared during the past week consisted of John and Maggie Fielding, Kitty Rowell, Minnie Seaman, Emma Miles, Messrs. Turner, Talbot
